Kohn Quits In PWA Quiz On Housing Loans, Fees

Shakeup Believed Under Way, Ickes Pushing Investigation.

$20,000,000 Jobs Involved in Probe

Inflation of Land Values Charged; Officials "On Carpet."

A drastic shake-up in the PWA's housing division was reported progressing last night as Director Robert D. Kohn, Nationally known in realty fields, handed in his resignation after Secretary of the Interior Ickes ordered an investigation of his agency.

Ickes, reported angered at the division's business methods, said he had ordered a check on all "limited dividend" housing projects so far approved. He explained that he was suspicious that highly watered land values have been accepted by the Government as security on loans. He called housing officials on the carpet, and Kohn's resignation yesterday was the first upshot.

Ickes said it had been disclosed that land values allowed by the division were the base of the investigation, which would include large allowances made for land on the semiprivate projects and payment of large fees. He said the inquiry was ordered by him when he discovered the housing division had allowed the Boulevard Gardens project in Queens, N. Y., a value on its land eight times greater than the president of the sponsoring corporation had sworn it was worth in 1929.

The Secretary, who is also public works administrator, said involved in the inquiry are 11 limited dividend projects for which the PWA has earmarked $20,000,000.

Kohn Leaves City.

Kohn, who headed the division since its inception, is one of the country's most noted architects. Former president of the American Institute of Architects, he was accepted as a leading authority on housing. He had left the city last night, his apartment reporting he had gone to Ossining, N. Y., his home.

It was learned in responsible quarters that officials of the division would be summoned before Ickes again today. A report compiled by Louis Glavis, head of the Interior Department's Division of Investigation, was reported to be in Ickes hands.

The Housing Division is a separate unit from the Public Works Emergency Housing Corporation.

Missing Tokyo Envoy Is Found

Suicide Attempt Cause of Disappearance; China Crisis Eased.

Nanking, China, June 13 (AP).—The search for Eimei Kuramoto, Japanese vice consul whose disappearance was regarded as an important international incident, ended today in a cemetery, where he was found, hungry and unkempt, beside an ancient tomb of the Ming dynasty.

Kuramoto told a rambling story of having tried to commit suicide by starvation but of being driven to beg for food by the pangs of hunger.

He was turned over to Japanese authorities, who declined to comment on the case, but the Chinese said that he probably will be returned to Japan for observation.

The finding of Kuramoto eased the situation here. The Japanese government had announced that China would be held responsible for the vice consul's disappearance, and Japanese warships were anchored off shore here.

The services were in charge of the Rev. I. Q. Wood, past National chaplain of the American Legion. Members of the legion were active pallbearers. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery was with full military honors. Representative Coffin served in the Navy.

He died in Washington last Friday as the result of a fractured skull received in an automobile accident.

18 Missing as Fire Destroys Freighter At Sea; 17 Rescued

U. S. Ship Saves Part of Norwegian Crew in Caribbean.

New York, June 13 (AP).—A tale of swift tragedy in the Caribbean Sea—the destruction by fire of the Norwegian freighter Knut Hamsun, with 17 or 18 persons missing—was told today in terse wireless messages from the United Fruit liner Zacapa.

The captain and 16 members of the crew, after drifting in a lifeboat for nearly three days, were rescued by the Zacapa.

Search for a second lifeboat, containing the chief officer and 16 others, was abandoned at midday by the fruit vessel, which continued on to Havana.

Advices from the freighter's agent in Panama said the missing lifeboat must contain the mate and 17 members of the crew, as the ship's list showed 35 persons aboard.

Lifeboat May Hit Islands.

In abandoning the search, the fruit liner messaged the belief the lifeboat would drift to the cays off the Nicaraguan coast—the tiny islands known as Mosquito and Morrison Cays.

The freighter, with a cargo of nitrate from Chile, bound for Newport News, caught fire, burned to the water's edge and sank Sunday night about 150 miles off the Nicaraguan coast, near Quita Suena Bank.

Carnera Held 6-5 Choice on Eve of Battle

Champion Remains at His Camp; Baer, Serious, Goes to New York.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

New York, June 13.—The Nation's public enemy No. 1—the Carnera-Baer battle for the heavyweight championship of the world—will be literally thrashed out tomorrow evening by the six-ounce gloves of Italy's overgrown owner of the title and America's playboy of the prize ring, when the fistic paths of these two battling Behemoths cross within the confines of the Madison Square Garden's bowl of punch at Long Island City.

Their training at an end, a $250,000 advance sale hailing the public interest in the brawl, and the Garden conservatively anticipating an assemblage of 60,000 noncombatants, Carnera and Baer tonight were cloistered in far-flung training camps, prepared for what the morrow might bring.

Multiple schools of fistic thought tonight were mulling the possibilities of tomorrow's battle that has offered up a poser for the "smart money," as well as the genus fan, what with conflicting reports of the physical condition of Bad Maxie at his Asbury Park camp, and of Ponderous Primo at his Pompton Lakes retreat.

But transcending all the possibilities of the encounter is the data contained in the highly-combustible

Last of Escaped Kansas Convicts Believed Slain

Miami, Okla., June 13 (AP).—An outlaw slain in a gun battle with police here yesterday was tentatively identified today as Jim Clark, last of the 11 prisoners who escaped from Kansas State Prison, Memorial Day, 1933. The other ten prisoners have been killed or recaptured.

The gunman and a companion, Leroy Denniston, Checotah, Okla., were fatally shot by police after they had opened fire and killed a Miami policeman when the officers approached to question them.

Horse Racing In D. C. Nears; Bill Approved

Senate Committee Passes Proposal of House With Amendment.

Approval of the Senate District Committee was given yesterday to the House bill legalizing horse racing and pari-mutuel betting in the National Capital.

Senator Hamilton F. Kean (Republican), of New Jersey, was authorized by the committee to report the measure to the Senate with an amendment today. The amendment will authorize the District Commissioners to prescribe regulations for the government of the proposed race track and to prescribe penalties for violations of the regulations.

Verbiage of the amendment has not been drafted, but it was aimed at the doping of horses and other sharp race-track practices. Representative Loring Black (Democrat), of New York, father of the bill, said he felt sure the House would accept the amendment.

Holds Track Option.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of New York, nationally prominent in horse racing, already has an option on the old Benning race track. She will purchase the track and develop it as the outstanding racing course in the country as soon as the bill is enacted, Representative Black told the committee. There was no record vote on the measure in committee, Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, chairman, said.

Chicago, June 13 (AP).—Called a "psychopathic liar," the man authorities insist is Allen Robert Hammel today heard employes of the company he is on trial for robbing of $37,000 insist he was once a guard for the firm.

"Hammel" has emphatically denied he departed with the money from a Brinks Express Co. truck, maintaining he is Burt Armstrong, of New York. He will probably take the witness stand tomorrow to reiterate his contention, his attorneys said.

Solution to Cancer Imminent, Claims Minnesota Physician

By Howard W. Blakeslee
(Associated Press Science Editor).

Cleveland, June 13.—Solution of the cancer problem is in sight, the facts to reduce its death toll already known, the American Medical Association was informed today.

A sort of Achilles heel of cancer has been found, a spot about the size of a quarter, appearing in many of the most serious types of this scourge. It has been and still is largely unrecognized. It leads to cancer and almost sure death, yet, if treated in time, there will be no cancer.

"There are enough known facts," said Dr. William Carpenter MacCarty, of Rochester, Minn., "if they were properly and extensively applied, to solve the cancer problem.

"I have already studied over 2,500 cancers the size of a quarter or smaller, found surgically in the breast, stomach and large intestines. None of these gave positive, characteristic signs or symptoms of cancer, but all gave signs and symptoms which are sometimes, although not always, associated with cancer.

"There were only two reasons why these relatively small cancers were discovered. They were suspected in spite of the absence of textbook signs and symptoms, and they were found by exploration."

These 25-cent areas, he explained, "do not represent the average size of cancers as they are actually being recognized by general physicians." The reason, he added, is to a large extent because medical students are not taught to recognize these early cancers, but only the late stages, "when it is too late to do anything."

These early cancers, he asserted, "can be found, are being found and are being safely removed."

"Cancer, in my opinion, is a simple problem, although we may never know the various specific causes and find no specific cure. It is a problem of health in general, external and internal cleanliness and heredity. It is, insofar as the profession is concerned, a problem of prevention, which means early recognition and treatment of things which frequently end in cancer. It is a disease which is the result of disease."

U. S. Probes Plane Crash; Seizes Data

Navy Intelligence Aid Grabs Chemicals and Papers.

Coroner Is Threatened With Federal Power; Inquest Today.

Livingston Manor, N. Y., June 13 (AP).—Surrounding its action with secrecy, the Federal Government tonight stepped into the investigation of the airline crash in which seven person rode to death, and seized all papers, documents and three bottles of chemicals found in the luggage of William A. Bader, chemical engineer, a victim.

A naval intelligence officer who appeared suddenly and refused to disclose his name took possession of the evidence, and departed immediately in an official naval automobile in the direction of New York City.

"I have nothing to say," was his only comment after emerging from a two and a half hour conference with Dr. Victor G. Bourke, Sullivan County coroner.

Sworn to Secrecy.

Dr. Bourke said he was "sworn to secrecy" as to what happened in the conference, but said he had given up the documents because an authority superior to his own had demanded them.

Earlier in the day Dr. Bourke had postponed until tomorrow an inquest into the deaths of the six men and one woman killed when the plane careened into Last Chance Hill last Saturday during fog and storm.

The Navy machine, bearing the intelligence officer and two other passengers, all in civilian clothing, whisked up to the home of the coroner shortly after the postponement was announced. The intelligence officer strode inside without comment.

He left in the same manner. Dr. Bourke obviously was bewildered by the swiftness with which the Navy took charge of that phase of the investigation.

Obeyed High Authority.

"I questioned the right of his (the intelligence officer's) authority to seize any of the evidence which we had, but I turned over the papers and bottles belonging to Bader when I was told I had to by an authority above that of the State," Dr. Bourke said.

"I was threatened with this power also and sworn by it to secrecy. My hands now are washed of that phase of the investigation. The papers and bottles now are in the hands of the United States Navy.

"I was told the Navy was not concerned with any other aspects of the crash. I did not notify the Federal Government that I had these papers and I do not know who did. I can not quote the name of the statute (believed a Federal statute) invoked against me.

Silent About Swanson.

"They also questioned my right to divulge any information concerning the papers. I will not answer any questions concerning the individual or the papers."

Dr. Bourke admitted he had been in conference with important officials frequently during the day, but he would not say who they were. He refused to answer this question:

"Was Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson one of the men with whom you conferred?"

Dr. Bourke said the inquest will be held tomorrow, he pointed out, concerning inquiry into a possible explosion, that the Federal Government had seized all of the evidence.

The naval intelligence officer was gray-haired, of military bearing and about 40 years old. He ignored completely all attempts to obtain information from him.

Dairyman in Atlanta Kidnaped in Milk War

Atlanta, June 13 (AP).—Three men were arrested today in connection with a milk war kidnaping-beating and Karl Kaplan, the victim, identified one of them as the one who assaulted him.

Kaplan told police J. G. Peek, 40, president of the Cloverdale Dairy, was one of the abductors who beat him with a leather strap after kidnaping him from his place of business under a ruse they were officers who held a warrant for his arrest. Peek was held under $2,000 bond on kidnaping charges.

Vote Today Holds Fate Of Labor Bill

Republicans to Decide on Attitude Toward New Measure.

Foes Hold President Would Have Too Much Power.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Republican Leader Charles L. McNary yesterday called a meeting of all Senate Republicans for this morning to determine their attitude toward a proposed substitute for the Wagner labor disputes bill. On the decision of the Republicans depends the adjournment of Congress and Administration handling of the threatened steel strike.

The compromise measure in the controversy over the Wagner bill, sent to the Capitol by the Administration in the form of a joint resolution, would provide for establishment of a board or boards to conciliate labor disputes and to hold secret elections among employes to ascertain what person or organization they wished to represent them.

Opposition to this compromise immediately became apparent on Capitol Hill as well as in the ranks of industry, which bitterly resisted the original labor disputes bill. In some quarters the proposed compromise was held "almost as bad" as the Wagner bill.

Too Much Power, Opponents Say.

Particularly objectionable to opponents of the compromise measure was a section providing that the proposed board or boards, with the President's approval, may "prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution." The purpose of the resolution is to "effectuate the labor policy of the National industrial recovery act."

In Republican cloakrooms it was argued that this provision would give carte blanche to the President and the boards appointed to prescribe company unions, require closed shop operations in industry or, in brief, to do whatever pleased Mr. Roosevelt in respect to the labor situation.

The orders of the proposed board would be enforced in the same manner as orders of the Federal Trade Commission, being referred to the Federal courts for review or enforcement under contempt of court penalties.

Under the authority contained in the proposed compromise, the President could name a board to investigate the steel labor dispute. This board could order an election held in all steel mills by secret ballot to determine whether the workers wish to have the Amalgamated Association of Steel, Iron &

Kiss Didn't Cause Crash, So Widow Saves $110,000

Pittsburgh, June 13 (AP).—Basing her defense on a denial that she was being kissed by a man companion at the time of an automobile accident, Mrs. Margaret Stevenson has defeated a $110,000 suit for damages.

A jury decided in her favor yesterday in an action brought by Mrs. Raymond C. Turpen, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Emile McC. Beadling, of Dormont, Pa.

Mrs. Turpen charged that Mrs. Stevenson, widow of A. W. Stevenson, former assistant football coach at the University of Pittsburgh, had been kissed by Thomas B. Carmichael, of Pittsburgh, just before the automobile struck a truck at Bedford, Ohio, July 21, 1930.

Mrs. Turpen, who asked $60,000, said Carmichael had his arm around Mrs. Stevenson, the driver. Mrs. Beadling sued for $50,000.

Heavy Police Details to Guard Nonunion Men Today.

Trouble Assumes Nation-Wide Scope

Entire Federal Building Program May Be Involved.

Eleventh-hour negotiations to avert an open shop war in the Capital's building trades failed late yesterday when William L. Hutcheson, president of the Carpenters International Union, announced his men will not return to work at a rate below $1.37½ an hour.

Hutcheson's statement followed a conference with Commissioner George E. Allen, at which the latter vainly attempted to forestall the violence feared today when nonunion carpenters go to work on new Federal buildings.

Three carpenters were nursing bruises and broken bones, suffered when they were attacked while working on the new Church of the Reformation on East Capitol street, opposite the Folger Shakespearan Library.

Goaded into action by the outbreak, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, laid plans for rigid policing of all Federal buildings under construction here, starting at 7 a. m. today. Gas bomb squads will patrol trouble areas. All policemen's leaves, except in emergency, were canceled. Reserves were ordered into the downtown district.

Asks Protection.

Skinker & Garrett, one of the local contracting concerns that went open shop Tuesday, requested Maj. Brown to supply police protection when it starts work today on a postal substation job at 1418 I street northwest.

Nine contracting companies, all engaged in Federal building here, advertised yesterday for experienced carpenters to start work at 7:30 a. m. today at $1.10 an hour, eight hours a day. Disinterested officials interpreted the opening violence as an effort to intimidate workmen against answering the advertisements.

The B-W Construction Co., erecting the city postoffice addition, announced it would not go open shop, preferring to shut down operations. It is the only large out-of-town company now holding a Federal contract here which has refused to attempt to break the carpenters' strike by going along with the other builders, so far as could be learned, T. J. Jackson, of Silver Spring.

NRA Scored As Thompson Quits Board

Darrow Aid Charges Small Business Being Crushed by Recovery Codes.

Small business "is being oppressed to the point of extinction," W. O. Thompson charged yesterday in tendering to President Roosevelt his resignation as a member of the National Recovery Review Board.

The former law partner of the board's chairman, Clarence Darrow, complained bitterly in a letter to the President against "the growing encouragement of monopolistic combinations and practices by the National Recovery Administration."

Thompson riddled the new NRA price-fixing policy as "merely a device to calm an aroused public realization of the extent of monopolistic practices."

"According to Gen. Johnson's statement," he reported, "the new policy 'does not affect codes already approved.' Practically all major industries are now operating under approved codes.

Important Groups Coded.

"According to Division of Research and Planning figures, 68 per cent of 325 codes studied contained price fixing provisions of one kind or another. The industries still to be codified are in the main small industrial groups. Just how, then, does the newly announced policy eliminate monopolistic practices, if

U. S. Speeds Factory Work Relief Drive

Survey of Idle Mills to Be Reopened Gets Under Way.

Impetus was given to the new joint Federal and State program for operation of idle factories with unemployed labor yesterday on extension of the plan to two underwear mills in Boston.

Other developments in the situation included:

Officials of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration announced State relief agencies have been requested to encourage the use of idle industrial plants.

North Dakota sought definite word from the Public Works Administration on whether it shall receive $4,384,000 intended for use in operating factories, coal mines, grain elevators and other enterprises to provide work for the jobless and feed and clothe them.

A FERA financial report disclosed $899,863 in Federal appropriations to States for the fiscal year ending May 31 went to self-help organizations, some of which was spent operating abandoned canning factories and sewings rooms.

The FERA reported the Ohio relief organization has begun a survey of idle plants available for the job-creating program.

Girl, Mother, Roped Together, Swim Out in Lake to Meet Death

Highland Park, Ill., June 13 (AP). Dreading a future that might tear them apart, a mother and daughter bound themselves together with rope and swam out into the chill waters of Lake Michigan at dawn today, courting death.

The mother won that oblivion, but the 22-year-old daughter whose illness had threatened death and separation, was washed ashore, still living, still joined to her mother's body by the span of clothesline.

A newsboy strolling on the sands at the foot of Beach lane discovered the tragedy.

Mrs. Alice King Bott, 63, lay lifeless beside her daughter Margaret, who was unconscious, barely alive.

Revived by a physician, the daughter gasped:

"We wanted to die together."

The girl was rushed to her home a few steps away on Beach lane, where the doctor and two nurses were able to piece together the story of the bizarre suicide pact.

Since Mrs. Bott was divorced from Rhea Bott, the mother and daughter had been inseparable, enjoying their own companionship to the exclusion of all others. Recently Margaret underwent two operations for mastoid abscesses. They were beginning to form again, and a doctor warned that another operation would be necessary.

Fearing that the third operation would be fatal, mother and daughter determined that they would leave life together.

At dawn they arose and walked to the [redacted], tying themselves together, they waded toward the rising sun. When they could walk no longer, they swam.

They had gone about three-quarters of a mile, the daughter said,

Radcliffe's Hat Tossed in Ring

Roosevelt's Friend to Fight Ritchie for Governor Nomination.

Baltimore, June 13 (AP).—George L. Radcliffe, personal friend of President Roosevelt, late today announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Maryland.

Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, seeking a fifth term in office, Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, and Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, also are candidates.

Radcliffe made his announcement after a final conference with Senator Millard E. Tydings, who previously had said he would support Radcliffe if he ran. Tydings for weeks had urged the other candidate to withdraw. He publicly stated that the political fight between Ritchie and Jackson would "wreck" the Democratic party in the State.

Upon learning of Radcliffe's announcement, Ritchie and Jackson said they had no intention of withdrawing.

Those who have urged the candidacy of Radcliffe, who was regional adviser for the Public Works Administration, have stressed his personal friendship with Roosevelt.

Richmond, June 13 (Spl.).—Mosby West, automobile salesman here, has learned how it feels to go for an automobile ride and then walk home. Spain Periled By Open Break Of Catalonians

Civil War Is Threatened as Leaders Demand Separate State.

Madrid, June 13 (U.P.).—Danger of civil war in the Spanish Republic threatened today with Catalonians openly demanding a break from the rest of Spain and formation of a separate state in the north.

Prime Minister Ricardo Samper admitted the seriousness of the threat to his regime when he declared the leaders of Catalonia had "placed themselves in a revolutionary attitude against the central state."

Catalonian leaders secretly prepared for rebellion. Arms were distributed to the men in the hills. At secret meetings agitators demanded a break with Spain—long threatened by Catalonian separatists.

Federal Power Weakened.

The threat was seen as the most severe test the 3-year-old republic has faced. Madrid leaders favoring a strong federal government fought to preserve the union, but dissension in many quarters weakened their power.

The Catalonians were said to have the support of farm and labor blocs, both powerful. Farmers were ready to walk from their fields again to aid the rebellion designed to set up a Catalonian republic.

Monarchists watched the struggle hopefully, expecting it to weaken the republic and strengthen their cause for the return of Alfonso XIII to his throne.

Prime Minister Samper was bitter against the withdrawal of the so-called Esquerra or Leftist bloc from the Madrid Parliament yesterday, as part of the Catalonian uprising threat. The move followed the Catalonian Parliament's second approval of the land law which Madrid had declared unconstitutional. It covers contracts between farmers and land owners.

Want Law Changed.

The Madrid Federalists insisted the law, while good in many ways, should be enacted by the federal government—not the states. The Catalonians made this point their issue.

"The Catalonian Parliament has placed itself in a distinctly revolutionary attitude against the central state," Prime Minister Samper said.

Barcelona, June 13 (U.P.).—In ominous calm, the people of Catalonia here await the next action by the Madrid government. Order was maintained, but popular feeling ran high.

A great demonstration was organized tonight for the returning Esquerra deputies who quit the Madrid Parliament yesterday.

NRA Hit as Big Business Aid By Thompson as He Resigns

it dose not apply to approved codes? * * *

"The trend of the NRA has been and continues to be toward the encouragement and development of monopoly capitalism in the United States."

He protested government of industry by "monopolistic combinations" under NRA "has already resulted in a marked increase in prices. This, in turn, has caused a drop in consumption of goods. * * *

Textile Output Cut.

"Also as a result of high prices and decreased purchasing power, the textile industry has been forced to resort to 25 per cent curtailment of production. In other words, the amount of goods that can be bought by workers with declining earnings has dropped as a result of price advances, created by monopolistic practices. * * *

"The actual result of NRA codes has been merely a continuation of the stagger system, under which more workers are attached to the pay roll but all are receiving wholly inadequate earnings.

"The minimum wages established under the codes have tended to become the maximum, thus dragging down the general average of all wages. Even these minimum wages have given no relief to Negroes or to many other categories of low-paid workers."

Employers Given Edge.

Thompson objected the collective bargaining section of the National industry recovery act "has been transformed into its opposite—a vehicle for employers to force through compulsory arbitration and company unionism."

He contended the NRA "handed over to trade associations, dominated by the largest corporations in the various industries, the formulation of codes of fair competition, without representation of the consumers or workers."

Even the American Federation of Labor, Thompson argued, has by its acts in the clothing industry shown ..... its chief concern is in the interest of big business."

Sees Fascist Trend.

Thompson added:

"The NRA reflects the inability of so-called 'enlightened capitalism' to operate a 'planned economy' to improve the living standards of the masses. Its development day by day reveals more clearly a marked trend toward Fascism in the United States.

"The only solution involves a change in class relationships. Only a government by the workers and farmers can plan production, produce goods for use and not for profit, eliminate poverty and raise the standard of living of the entire population."

Kohn Resigns As Ickes Sifts Housing Loans

Shakeup Reported in PWA Unit; Fees, Land Values Under Attack.

The division was created to handle the semiprivate limited dividend projects only, the Housing Corporation having charge of Federal-sponsored and operated slum clearance projects, such as will be erected in Washington. The inquiry will not affect the corporation nor the Washington program, it was said.

In addition to investigating land values allowed, it was learned Secretary Ickes ordered inquiry into fees paid attorneys and consultants in connection with various projects. It was learned also that the investigation included study of changes made in plans for the projects after they have been approved, to see if any individuals are deriving pecuniary benefits from the changes.

In addition to regular agents of the Bureau of Investigation, construction experts have been called in on the inquiry.

Projects Listed.

Of the 11 projects for which $20,000,000 has been earmarked, about $1,500,000 has gone out in actual payments, it was disclosed. The 11 projects represent the total outstanding projects of the division. They are Neptune Gardens, Boston, $3,500,000 allotted, no contract signed; Juniata project, Philadelphia, $1,039,000 allotted, contract signed; Boulevard Gardens, Queens, N. Y., $3,450,000 allotted and under construction, but payment stopped when land value was held to be excessive; Neighborhood Association, St. Louis, $640,000, contract signed; Euclid Housing Corporation, Euclid, Ohio (Cleveland), $1,000,000, under construction; Hillside Housing, Bronx, N. Y., $5,000,000, under construction; Hallet Gardens, Astoria, Long Island, $2,975,000, contract not signed; Hillcreek Homes, Philadelphia, $1,290,000, no contract signed; Boylan Housing Project, Raleigh, N. C., $198,600, under construction; Sunshine Apartment Corporation, Richmond, $663,000, no contract signed, and Alta Vista Project, Alta Vista, Va., $84,000, under construction.

It was learned that the board appointed to report on the fair value of the land entered by the Dick-Meyer Corporation for the Boulevard Gardens at Queens, N. Y., which started the investigation, is ready to submit its report. Indications were that its appraisal of the land would be approximately $100,000 to $200,000 less than the figures submitted by the corporation.

Personnel Changes Seen.

A number of changes in the personnel of the Housing Division were reported to be in the offing as a result of the inquiry. It was stated at PWA that "the effect of the investigation will be to squeeze out any water in land values that would hike rent in the projects."

Limited dividend projects are private undertakings operating on loans received from the Government. These PWA loans are secured by collateral, in which the land to be used is included. It was explained that hiking the value of the land would: (1) allow larger loans from the Government; (2), increase dividends by increasing the total valuation on which dividends would be based; (3), tend to increase rents.

The PWA recently rescinded a $3,230,000 allotment made to a limited dividend corporation in San Francisco because of too high a value set on land. Last winter it transferred seven projects to its own housing corporation when sponsors could not meet requirements. This week it threw out two New York proposals because of their excessive size.

It was learned that Secretary Ickes would not act on Kohn's resignation until his inquiry is concluded.

resentative Black said, will mean expenditure of $1,000,000 or more for rehabilitation of the track. During the racing season, 400 to 500 persons would be employed there and 25 or 30 would be employed throughout the year.

"I am still inherently opposed to this bill, but I am going to vote for it because it will mean increased employment," Senator Patrick A. McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, said. "Since the public hearings held by this committee, I have received a letter protesting the measure. It stated that when racing was legal in Washington before many Government employes gambled in excess of their means and that was why racing was prohibited. Will there be a repetition of that if this bill is enacted?"

Various Tracks.

"It all depends, Senator, on what kind of a race track you have and how it is operated," replied Senator Kean. "If you have a well-regulated track, conducted well under control of stewards strong enough to enforce high standards, the track probably will be an advantage to Washington. If you have a cheap track, you will have the worst sort of a thing you could have."

"Mrs. Whitney realizes the danger of an improperly conducted track and she wants to make the Benning track the ideal track of the country," Representative Black said. "She will have the highest class men and women in racing associated with her in its conduct. They know what it will mean to racing if the track in the National Capital is not conducted on the highest plane, as they intend it shall be."

"This measure will not permit betting outside the track will it?" asked Senator McCarran.

"No, sir; it will not," replied E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel. "Such gambling away from the track is prohibited by District laws. This will permit legal betting only at the track."

"Do you think it will make for less opportunity for illegal betting in Washington than now exists?" inquired Senator McCarran. "We now have too many poolrooms and illegal gambling places."

"I believe it will," replied Representative Black.

"How much racing will there be in Washington if this bill is enacted?" asked Senator James J. Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvan.a

"There probably will be a racing season in the spring and another in the fall," Representative Black said. "In all, together with the Maryland tracks, there probably will be four and a half months of racing in this vicinity. Certainly the Washington and Maryland tracks will not run at the same time, because that would not be practical from any standpoint."

Frank Hight, representing the hotels, said it had been estimated that the track would mean something like $900,000 annually to the District coffers. The bill prescribes a 10 per cent tax on admission charges and a 2 per cent tax on the betting pool of each race.

Factory Work Relief Plans Are Speeded

Survey of Idle Mills to Be Reopened Gets Under Way.

Hopkins, Federal emergency relief administrator, explaining the idle factory project. He said:

"The production and distribution of goods needed by the unemployed under work provisions will require such workers as skilled and common labor, factory, textile and clothing workers, industrial engineers and trained production and business workers. Where it is advantageous, the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation will continue to be used to buy or exchange supplies and products. This would fall into two types of management, direct operation by work division or by cooperatives and self-help organizations."

It also was learned that State agencies in Texas have used Federal funds to cover the overhead expenses in slaughtering more than 1,000,000 head of cattle at 19 meat-canning plants, all of which were idle until relief money was received.

FERA officials again substantiated the reports published exclusively in The Post yesterday that all factories reopened would be managed by State relief administrations, most of which are financed to a great extent by the Federal Government.

Example of Work.

As an illustration of how the program would work, experts cited plans for the Massachusetts relief administration to take over two closed Boston underwear factories. The plants will be operated with skilled unemployed labor. The finished product, made from raw material bought by the State, will be distributed among the needy. Workers in the plants will receive all the underwear they need. Part of the surplus will be exchanged for food, canned in other unemployed factories.

The Department of Agriculture and State agricultural colleges, it was said, will assist in administration of the projects.

FERA was notified Ohio relief administrators expected to reopen numerous idle mills after completion of their survey. The State has received relief grants of several millions in recent months. It is expected a large portion of its relief budget in the future will be used to finance factory operation.

Advertising Club Fetes Post

The Washington Advertising Club held a testimonial luncheon in honor of the first anniversary of the purchase of The Washington Post by Eugene Meyer yesterday. Snapped at the speaker's table are (left) Norman Kal, president of the club, and Commissioner George E. Allen.

Messenger Is Klled On Graduaton Eve

Cumberland, Md., June 13 (Spl.).—Clifton Paul Henry, 18, telegraph messenger who would have graduated from Allegany High School Friday, was instantly killed last night when the motorcycle he was riding collided with the automobile of John Billmeyer, near Ridgeley.

His companion, Lawrence Lowery, 20, was injured, but not seriously. Henry, son of William F. Henry, was born at Orleans Cross Roads, W. Va.

Roanoke, Va., Jeweler Elected Legion Head

Roanoke, Va., June 13 (Spl.).—Roanoke Post, No. 3, American Legion, has elected Leo F. Henebry, local jeweler, commander for the year. Other officers are Carleton Penn and A. M. Rennick, vice commanders; Dr. Nolan B. Harmon, chaplain; Henry D. Lee and R. E. Carleton, sergeants at arms; F. M. Creasy, historian, and M. S. Thomas, service officer.

The post recently attained the largest membership in its history, a total of 388 being on the rolls.

idly that the officers and crew were forced to the lifeboats without sending out an SOS.

The Knut Hamsun was a vessel of 3,234 tons net, owned in Bergen, Norway. Built in 1911, she was 410 feet overall.

A stop was scheduled for Jacksonville, Fla., on the run to Newport News.

Radio Tells Story.

The first word of the disaster came in a message to the United Fruit Line offices from Capt. George McBride of the Zacapa:

"At 6 a. m., June 13, picked up Capt. Frick and 16 men from Norwegian freighter Knut Hamsun 45 miles west of Quita Suena Bank. Ship loaded with nitrate and proceeding from Iruique, Chile, to Jacksonville. Ship burned and sank Sunday night. Chief officer and 16 men in another lifeboat still missing."

Two hours later came the second message:

"8:30 a. m. Have been searching since 6 o'clock this morning for missing lifeboat from Knut Hamsun without results. Have radioed Norwegian Consul at Cristobal to make every effort to locate missing boat."

Shortly after mid-day the Zacapa messaged she had given up the search and was proceeding to Havana.

Post's Growth Brings Tribute From Ad Club

Eugene Meyer, Publisher, Felicitated Upon Achievement.

Tribue to growth and development of The Washington Post during its first year under the ownership of Eugene Meyer was paid by the Washington Advertising Club yesterday in an anniversary testimonial luncheon at the Raleigh Hotel.

For the past 12 months The Post has climbed steadily in al fields of journalistice ndeavor, newspaper executives from several othr dailies declared in brief addresses.

"We are happy to congratulate our good neighbor, The Washington Post, and its publisher, Mr. Meyer, on a year of progress," asserted Frank B. Noyes, president of the Washington Star Publishing Co. and president of the Associated Press.

Progress Praised.

He praised the progress of The Post under its present regime, which began June 13, 1933.

Congratulations and good wishes for the constantly increasing success of the new Post were extended by Fleming Newbold, business manager of the Star, and Sam A. Kauffman, assistant business manager of the Star.

Nelson P. Poynter, business manager of the Washington Daily News, told of reviewing the anniversary edition, which was issued yesterday morning.

"It was a splendid feat of journalism in all its phases," Poynter said. "Competition is faster in Washington than in any city of its size in the United States," Poynter continued.

"The new Washington Post is helping set the pace. I am happy to congratulate it on its first birthday."

The Post as a constructive factor in the District, and an invaluable factor in procuring what is best in District government, was described by Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of District Commissioners, and Commissioner George E. Allen.

Interesting Work.

As guest of honor and principal speaker, Mr. Meyer described the "building up" and new organization of The Post.

"It is intensely interesting work," Mr. Meyer said.

He pointed out that Washington sends more news to all parts of the Nation every day than any other city in the United States.

Stressing the importance of intelligent, enlightened advertising, Mr. Meyer asserted that Americans are not yet ready for regimentation and that the spirit of the pioneers who built the country still exists.

The meeting was presided over by Norman C. Kal, president of the Advertising Club, who introduced speakers.

Arms Sale Ban Upheld by Hull

Secretary Tells Bolivia Action Does Not Violate Treaty.

Secretary Hull, replying to the Bolivian government's protest of the ban against sales of war munitions going to the Chaco, yesterday declared in a note to the Bolivian minister that this action was not a violation of the permanent treaty with Bolivia, the Associated Press reported.

Replying further to Bolivia's protest that the Presidential proclamation was unfair to that country, Hull said that inasmuch as the action was applied jointly to Bolivia and Paraguay, no benefit could accrue to Paraguay.

Bolivia's note contended the action favored her opponent and that if applied by other countries would leave Bolivia "unarmed, at the mercy of her adversary."

Cod Liver Oil Due to Become Just a Memory

Cod liver oil soon may disappear. Scientists have found something better.

But don't rejoice. If we can get rid of it, it will be replaced by something that probably will taste just as bad. It will be liver oil just the same. But it'll be salmon's instead of cod's.

It's a question of vitamins. It's just been discovered that so far as vitamins are concerned, cod is no match for salmon, Charles F. Lee and Chester D. Tolle, of the Bureau of Fisheries, declare in Industrial and Engineering Chemistry," a publication of the American Chemical Society.

Samples of salmon liver oil prepared from fish of the Columbia River, Puget Sound and the Fraser River in Britich Columbia, showed vitamin A potency 5 to 20 times greater than that of cod liver oil. Salmon's superiority was not so striking in vitamin D but it nevertheless beat its rival by a comfortable 2-to-1 margin.

$40,000,000 Steal Blocked By Sinclair Dealers

Motor Oil bootleggers steal $40,000,000 annually from the public on short measure. So says the American Automobile Association which recently investigated oil bootlegging in a large city. Out of 100 service stations where oil was purchased by A. A. A. investigators, 79 gave short measure—40 substituted an inferior oil—and 63 substituted oil of the wrong grade!

The conditions discovered by the Automobile Association do not exist when you stop at a Sinclair station. Sinclair dealers have blocked this $40,000,000 steal by selling Sinclair Motor Oils in Tamper-Proof cans. These cans are filled and sealed at Sinclair refineries. Each can is actually over-size to make sure you get full measure! And the patented opener which the dealer uses wrecks the can beyond further use.

City and Nation Observe Flag's 157th Birthday

Sons of the Revolution to Hold Program at Soldier Graves.

Washington and the Nation today celebrate the 157th birthday of the stars and stripes.

Although most of the patriotic organizations of the city are planning special observances of the day, June 14, 1777, when Old Glory was proclaimed an infant nation's standard by the Continental Congress, the principal celebration locally is in the hands of the General Society of the Sons of the Revolution, in triennial convention here.

More than 200 delegates of societies throughout the 48 States will register at the Mayflower Hotel this morning for a round of commemorative activity, culminating with toasts to the memory of the Nation's first President, George Washington, and to the health of its thirty-second, Franklin D. Roosevelt, at the convention banquet tonight.

At Mount Vernon, members of the society, headed by General President Maj. John Vernon Bouvier, jr., of New York, will lay a wreath at Washington's tomb. Wreaths also will be laid at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the Revolution at the old Presbyterian Meeting House in Alexandria and at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

The business meeting of the Sons of the Revolution convention will be called to order with the gavel Gen. Washington used at ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol in 1793. The gavel is the property of Potomac Lodge, No. 5, F. A. A. M.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry L. Roosevelt will be the principal banquet speaker. Addresses will be given also by Maj. Bouvier, Dr. Thomas Edward Green, general chaplain, and the Rev. Allen A. Stockdale, pastor of the First Congregational Church.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum is the principal speaker on a special Flag Day program arranged by Joseph R. Harris for the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel today at 12:30 p. m. Robert F. Fleming will preside.

"The History of the Flag," a pageant, will be presented by the Washington Lodge of Elks in the Elks Club Auditorium at 8 p. m. Past Exalted Ruler John D. Fitzgerald will be assisted by the color-bearers and the Elks Boys Band in the presentation.

The principal address will be given by Charles E. Ford, and Chaplain Robert S. Tiger will pronounce the invocation.

100 B.Y.P.U. Delegates To Represent Augusta

Waynesboro, Va., June 13 (Spl.).—Baptist Young People's Unions of Augusta County are planning to be represented by 100 delegates at the annual meeting of the Augusta Association to be held at Broadway on June 21.

This association embraces five Shenandoah Valley counties and includes 50 B. Y. P. U. groups, representing as many churches. The Rev. J. P. Gulley, of Crozet Baptist Church, president of the State association, will be one of the principal speakers.

$600 Damage Is Done To Home by Lightning

Waynesboro, Pa., June 13 (Spl.).—During the heavy electrical and rainstorm which hit this section yesterday, lightning struck and fired the home of the Rev. A. A. Hughes, vicar of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, above Mount Alto, near here.

Damage estimated at $600 was done to the rear of the home. Firemen of the State Sanatorium nearby had the flames under control before Waynesboro firemen, also summoned, arrived.

D. C. Artist Pictures First U. S. Flag Day

Three years before the Continental Congress proclaimed the stars and stripes the Nation's Flag, an aroused citizenry at Taunton, Mass., displayed their scorn of a British King by raising on the village common a flag on which the women folk prophetically had sewn, "Liberty and Union." It was a memorable day in Taunton, the day of this first U. S. flag-raising, and Ralph Davol, Washington artist, has captured its details in a mural above, which will fill 37½ square feet of wall space in the Taunton Public Library. In the left foreground is the Rev. Caleb Barnum, town minister, and Revolutionary War chaplain, whose "My only regret is that I have not a thousand lives to give to my country" preceded Nathan Hale's similar declaration. Standing by the tree at the right is Robert Paine, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and raising the flag is David Cobb, later one of Washington's generals.

Creeds Unite In Conference

Moral Uplift of Nation to Be Discussed at Session Today.

Meeting at the Mayflower Hotel today, the National Committee for Church and Welfare Recovery will hold a conference aimed at the spiritual and moral uplift of the country.

Leaders in religion and philanthropy will attend the sessions. The committee is composed of 170 officials of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths. Included are college and university presidents, executives of churches, educational and mission boards, welfare leaders, bishops and clergymen of many denominations, Senators, Representatives, lawyers and business men.

The Washington conference is the result of a series of twelve or more informal meetings held in New York and elsewhere, with members of the National committee in attendance.

Sessions today will be held from 10 a. m. until 10 p. m., with special luncheon and dinner programs. The spiritual and social phases of recovery will be stressed, and pronouncements by Pope Pius XI and President Roosevelt studied.

17 Identical Bids For Hose Stump District Officials

The District purchasing officer will need the wisdom of Solomon in deciding this question:

From whom will the District buy its annual replacement of fire hose?

esterday 17 bids of identical price, $0.6386 per foot for 10,000 feet, were received from 17 companies.

At the District Building it was said the NRA probably was responsible for the identical bids.

Which bidder will get the contract? Officials would not say, but added that judgment probably will be made on the terms of delivery and payment rather than price. Quality can not serve as a criterion, it was pointed out, because all bids are for hose meeting Federal specifications.

Saint Honored At Monastery

Franciscans Hold Solemn Rites, High Dignitaries Officiating.

Thronged with worshipers who came to render homage to the great Franciscan saint, St. Anthony of Padua, the Franciscan Monastery yesterday presented a scene of unusual color and solemnity. Hundreds of lilies bankink the altar of St. Anthony were blessed by the most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, after which the Friars marched in salemn procession through the church, chanting a hymn in honor of the saint.

With the Papal Delegate presiding at the throne, aided by the Right Rev. Mgr. Vagnozzi as assistant priest; the Very Rev. Claude Vogel, of the Capuchin College, and the Very Rev. Cuthbert Dittmeier, of St. Bonaventure's Monastery, acted as deacons of honor to his excellency during the solemn high mass. The celebrant of the mass was the Rev. Paul Breagy, with the Rev. Aidan Lane and Timothy Hanlon as deacon and subdeacon. The lilies blessed by his excellency were distributed to the congregation by the Knights of Mount St. Sepulcher.

With Dr. James Dickinson at the organ, the community choir, under the direction of the Rev. Bonaventure Simon, rendered Marzo's "Ecce Sarcedos Magnus" as processional, the ordinary of the mass being that of Bottazzo, "in honor of the Stigmata of St. Francis;" the proper parts of polyphonic setting by G. H. Wells. After the mass the faithful venerated a relic of the saint.

Seeks State Senate Seat.

Clarksburg, W. Va., June 13 (Spl.).—Asserting that Greenbrier County is entitled to a State senator this year because it has not had one in eight years, Frank W. Tuckwiler, a farmer and business man of Lewisburg, has certified himself with the secreary of state as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Ninth District senator.

when she turned and saw that her mother was dead. Then, Miss Bott continued, she started swimming toward shore, towing her mother's body, hoping thus to facilitate the discovery of the bodies.

Miss Bott did not remember how she had reached shore, as she had lost consciousness. The waves apparently washed mother and daughter ashore at almost the same point at which they had entered the water.

There the two forms, clad in bathing suits, were found by the newsboy, Jimmy Murphy.

Notes Tell of Pact.

Three notes, confirming the suicide plan, were found in the Bott home, one addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Raymond, neighbors. The suicides had been carefully planned. Cards with their identity carefully written on them were found in the slippers each wore. The rope, Miss Bott said, was so they might not drift apart in death.

Miss Bott was known as a talented artist. She and her mother were believed to be in good financial circumstances.

Miss Bott was educated in a private school at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and at the University of Iowa. Mother and daughter usually spent spring and summer at Highland Park and traveled the rest of the year.

Suspect in Kidnaping Of 1927 Held in Texas

Lewisburg, W. Va., June 13 (Spl.).—A man suspected of being the kidnaper of Dorothy Evelyn Bradley, 7, who was snatched from her home in Rupert, W. Va., in 1927, will be held at Palestine, Tex., until viewed by the girl's father, Richard Bradley.

Police report that personal identification marks of the suspect check with 11 out of 14 points of the description of William Marvin Roman, charged with kidnaping the Bradley child and long sought as her abductor.

Old Age Pensions Hit Snag in Senate

Bill Passes, Then Goes Back on Calendar.

The Senate yesterday passed without debate, but later reconsidered and restored to its calendar, the Dill bill authorizing an annual appropriation of $10,000,000 for apportionment to the States and Territories for old-age pensions, the Associated Press reported.

The measure was passed by unanimous consent, but Senator Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma, entered the chamber a few minutes later and obtained reconsideration.

This automatically restored the bill to the calendar to await its turn. Passage before adjournment was uncertain.

Peace Efforts Fail in District Strike Crisis

Three Carpenters Hurt in First Violence of Open Shop War.

Md.; Paul Frankhouser, 923 Massachusetts avenue northwest, and William Gray, 225-A Bates street northwest, were the three workmen beaten up at the new Lutheran Church being erected by Davis, Wick & Rosengarten.

Jackson and Gray were working on the roof, which at this stage of construction consists only of planking, and Frankhouser was in the basement when six men approached from a rear alley. They climbed to the roof, which is three stories above the street and two of the men held Jackson, a union member, while a third punched him in the face. Gray, however, was the most seriously injured. He suffered a broken nose and severe cuts but returned to the job after receiving treatment at Casualty Hospital.

From the roof the attackers, who have not been identified as pickets, went to the basement where they set upon Frankhouser. Robert Wick, son of a member of the contracting firm, telephoned police. Frankhouser still was being pummelled when the arrival of a police car scared off the attackers.

Police Mobilized.

Two men were arrested a few minutes later, near Union Station, but subsequently were released.

Mobilization of police reserves was ordered by Maj. Brown immediately after the incident was reported. Lieut. Harvey G. Callahan, in charge of the gas squad, was directed to assemble for emergency duty.

Chief of Detectives Frank S. W. Burke ordered details of his command to give special attention to all building operations. Uniformed men were sent to guard all Government projects involved, including the new Supreme Court, Federal warehouse addition, Library of Congress annex and all buildings in the downtown triangle.

Similar precautions also will be taken at Calvert Street Bridge, which has been closed to pedestrian and motor traffic since it was moved last week, due to the strike of carpenters, who were needed to nail down timbers at the approaches. The first guards to be sent out, under Maj. Brown's orders, went on duty at 4 p. m.

Picketing Allowed.

The police chief issued orders to precinct commanders to instruct their men not to interfere with peaceful picketing nor to engage with anyone in discussion of the labor situation.

Reserve squads of 15 men will be kept on 24-hour duty at the First and Third Precincts and the Traffic Bureau.

Employment of carpenters today by the big companies on an open-shop basis is the most decisive step taken since the strike began May 1, when the workmen struck for $1.37½ an hour and a 5-day, 30-hour week.

The Master Builders Association, which represents Washington contractors only, put open shop conditions into effect Tuesday after six weeks of negotiations with the carpenters' district council had failed to bring a settlement. This group, however, involves only a small percentage of construction under way here.

When the out-of-town contractors, responsible for practically all Federal buildings under construction, decided Tuesday they would follow the Master Builders' lead starting this morning they precipitated a "showdown" which likely will result in the withdrawal of all union mechanics working for them.

General Strike Due.

Representatives of the carpenters' district council will present a report this morning to the Washington Building Trades Council. The council is expected to order all union workmen, skilled and unskilled, to begin a sympathy strike immediately on those jobs which the report says are employing nonunion carpenters.

Hutcheson, who arrived late in the day from New York, declared carpenters will strike on every job under contract to the builders putting on nonunion men here.

If carried out, his threat means that the local trouble will assume Nation-wide proportions, halting the Government's extensive Post-office building program and throwing thousands of men out of work.

James Stewart & Co., erecting the Labor-I. C. C. buildings, has approximately $18,000,000 in Federal and municipal construction in New York alone, including a new postoffice. Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Atlanta and scores of small cities also are building new postoffices.

When, and if, the carpenters are taken off, other building trades probably will strike in sympathy, completely paralyzing operations for an indefinite period.

In a letter sent yesterday to John Locher, secretary of the Washington Building Trades Council, the B-W Construction Co. scored the unwillingness of union carpenters to compromise, but stated it would not go open shop along with its fellow-employers.

At the same time, the company petitioned President Roosevelt to act in the crisis, which threatens inestimable losses both to workmen made idle and to contractors.

Harry D. Watts, vice president of James Stewart & Co., denied reports that hiring of any experienced carpenters, whether they are organized or not, is a step toward abrogation of contracts with other union trades.

"We never have and do not intend at this time," said Watts, speaking for his concern, "to break contracts with organized labor. At the expiration of the contracts we have always negotiated new agreements which have been carried out faithfully by both parties without resort to strike.

"However, in the instance of the carpenters, they have made this impossible as agreements entered into with their representatives with the local Master Builders have been repudiated by their rank and file.

Wage Scale Increased.

"Consequently the only thing left in this instance was to raise the prevailing wage, established by the old contract, 10 per cent and pay the $1.10 wage established in an agreement between representatives of organized labor, including an executive officer of the carpenters' union, and the Government for Public Works Administration contracts, thereby making PWA rates the uniform prevailing rate in the locality."

Opening of Calvert Street Bridge to motor and pedestrian traffic, which had been held up by the carpenters' strike, will be ready about Saturday, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, said yesterday.

John W. Cowper Co., contractors on the bridge project, has solved the problem by connecting the bridge and street with concrete instead of wooden timbers. Therefore no carpenters were needed, although the Cowper company is one of those that advertised.

Caucus Today Decides Fate Of Labor Bill

Republican Attitude on Measure Will Swing Issue.

Tin Workers represent them in collective bargaining negotiations.

Workers Would Choose.

If a majority of workers in a mill selected the Amalgamated, the board would be empowered to order the mill owner to recognize that organization for collective bargaining and provide that if the mill owner did not recognize the union he would be violating section 7 (a) of the NRA act.

The language of the proposed compromise is general and broad in its sweep. The President would have under this legislation every power necessary to enforce the labor section of the NRA act. In addition his boards would have the authority to determine unfair labor practices wtihout restriction, it is contended.

Authorship of the compromise measure was not revealed, but it is understood to have the indorsement of the President, NRA officials, officers of the Labor Department and Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, author of both the NRA section 7 (a) and the much controverted labor disputes bill.

Several copies of the proposed modification were sent to Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill but none was formally made public. A copy was given to McNary, who passed it on to his following for their reaction. If the Republicans approve the compromise, it is intended to introduce it at once.

Adjournment Saturday Unlikely.

If the Republicans reject the compromise, two courses will be open to the Administration. One will be to jettison all plans to obtain legislation to end labor disputes. The alternative would be to keep Congress here for another week or so and battle the compromise proposal through the Senate. Due to gag rules it would not be difficult to get House approval for it.

Even should the Administration abandon efforts to obtain labor legislation this session, it now is doubtful whether Congress will be in a position to adjourn sine die on Saturday. The unexpected postponement of a vote on the Tugwell nomination until today virtually made a Saturday adjournment impossible.

It now appears that nothing but the vote on the Tugwell nomination will take place in the Senate today, thus leaving but two days until Saturday for that body to act on the relief deficiency appropriabill bill and the Administration housing bill. The appropriations Committee late today ordered a favorable report on the deficiency bill, but the housing bill remains in the Banking and Currency Committee.

Although the House showed unusual speed yesterday, the leaders were convinced Congress would be here next week. Speaker Rainey asserted that "there is not a chance of getting away before Wednesday, and we'll probably be here all next week." Democratic Floor Leader Byrns said he could see no possibility of adjournment before Tuesday.

The House yesterday completed, as far as it could, the "must program" of a week ago when it passed the housing bill. While waiting for the Senate to catch up the House will consider the Administration oil bill and hopes to pass it, although Senate concurrence is regarded as doubtful.

Following are the results from several towns and cities:

In the West Ward—Louis Spilman, 226; Edgar M. Quillen, 133. In the East Ward—Alonzo R. Harding, 270; J. B. Yount, jr., 205, according to the Associated Press.

WINCHESTER, Va.—Two independent candidates won common council seats in an election here in which one of the smallest votes on record was polled, the Associated Press said.

The name of C. Douglas Barnett, First Ward Democratic independent, was written in on 168 ballots, defeating Lawrence C. Hollis, Democratic candidate for reelection, who polled 91. Peyton J. Marshall polled 249, and Fred W. Forney, 238.

HARRISONBURG, VA.—Republicans regained control of the nine-man city council here when two of their party were elected. Weldon W. Berry, president of the Chamber of Commerce, Republican, won the place of A. P. Sumption, Democrat, who was not a candidate. Morris Spiro, a Republican former member, was elected over L. T. BRIDGEWATER, VA.—Fletcher Pope was elected by a 2-vote margin over O. A. Arey in the largest vote the town has known in a municipal contest. Pope received 101 votes to 99 for Arey. Mayor Walter S. Flory received only 39 votes. Three new councilmen were named and one of the old members defeated.

TIMBERVILLE, VA.—Mayor B. B. Bowers was reelected by one vote over Stanley Hoover. Nora Good, treasurer, the only woman municipal officer in the county, was reelected without opposition. Burkholder, 81 votes; W. C. Hobson, 74, and W. W. Williamson, with 73, and figured in a three-way tie for last place by matching O. B. Theis with J. C. Crim and D. F. Cootes with a vote of 72.

J. K. Wickes, of the "Old Guard" also returned to office with a vote of 75. Defeated candidates on the "Old Guard" ticket were B. F. White, town treasurer, I. C. Moyers and A. R. Oroark. "New Dealers" falling were Jacob F. Bowman and R. B. Wickes.

Hot Dog to Have Its Day, Too, At Tercentenary Celebration

St. Marys City, Md., June 13 (AP). From hot dog to history St. Marys City is ready for the tercentenary.

A check of the situation revealed today that while the tercentenary commission is taking adequate care of the history part of it, the concessionists are figuring that the populace get just as hungry for hot dogs and hamburger as it does for pageants.

When the visitor comes here Friday and Saturday he won't have near the worries his forbears had 300 years ago as to food items.

For instance, George Baldwin, of Baltimore, one of the concessionists, revealed today that he alone had entered an order for some 25,000 hot dogs. Then there's 2,500 pounds of hamburger and 100 barrels of beer to wash it down. Three thousand cases of bottled beer also are on the menu.

And there are to be lunches, chicken dinners, regular dinners, plate lunches and box lunches, selling from 50 cents to $1, Baldwin said. He himself will handle 31,000 of them.

Some of the items Baldwin mentioned included:

Two thousand five hundred crab cakes.

Two thousand chickens, weighing not less than 1½ pounds each.

Two thousand dozen rolls.

Two thousand five hundred loaves of bread.

Bars and beer gardens also are being set up.

Half of the proceeds of the sale of food and drink is to go to the tercentenary commission, Baldwin said.

St. Marys City State House Is Completed

Formal Dedication by Ritchie Will Take Place Saturday.

Leonardtown, Md., June 13 (Spl.).—The Memorial State House at St. Marys City is ready to be turned over to Gov. Ritchie on Saturday at the formal dedication to be held there.

The building is constructed of native pine, reinforced with oak and faced with old colonial bricks from Bushwood Manor, one of the oldest houses in Maryland, damaged by fire last January.

The brick wall skirting the roadside in front of the State House came from Carthagena, another colonial house of St. Marys County, and the tiling on the roof was found at St. Marys City.

The roof is put together with wooden pegs, no nails being used; the flooring was taken from old homes and the locks on the doors are stock locks inclosed in wooden cases.

The building is an exact reproduction of the original. The furnishings are in place and have been constructed under the direction of Mrs. Edmund Shoemaker, of Baltimore, chairman of the furnishings committee appointed by the Maryland Tercentenary Commission.

A minature reproduction of the sailing of the Ark and the Dove from Cowes, England, on November 21, 1633, has been presented.

The State House was built at the cost of $25,000 by Walter Trovell, architect, of Baltimore.

On Friday, Arthur Barneveld Bibbins, vice president of the Flag House Association and member of the Tercentenary Commission, will formally present to Gov. Ritchie a large silk National flag for the Memorial State House. The flag is a gift to the Tercentenary Commission from a Baltimore merchant.

Mr. Bibbins has also personally presented to St. Mary's Female Seminary a framed copy of an original page of the first printing done in Maryland.

Session Hears Church Union Plan Discussed

Dr. Richards, of Lancaster, Addresses Meeting at Frederick.

Frederick, Md., June 13 (Spl.).—An address by Dr. George W. Richards, Lancaster, Pa., on the merger of the Reformed Church in the United States and the Evangelical Synod of North America featured tonight's session of the Potomac Synod of the Reformed Church, in session at Hood College since Monday, which will adjourn tomorrow.

The merger will be consummated at a convention in Cleveland June 27.

The report of the social welfare committee by the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Rockwell, of Altoona, Pa., decried war and capitalism and urged a deeper realization of spiritual values. The Rev. Eugene L. McLane, of Philadelphia, formerly pastor of Grace Church here, treasurer of the board of ministerial relief, made a report and the Rev. Dr. Oswin Frantz, of the Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., made an address.

The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Schaeffer, of Philadelphia, of the home mission board, said:

"Home missions are at the crossroads financially. All the boards of home missions find themselves handicapped by a shrinkage of receipts. Our own board has not been able to pay its missionaries, although there has been a reduction of 43 per cent in the budget.

"The board proposes to set aside a day when every member of the Reformed Church is asked to give $1 to pay back salaries of the missionaries."

Prof. C. D. Shotts, member of the faculty of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, spoke on objections to the modern program of Christian education.

Dr. Casselman, speaking on foreign missions, said the work had gone forward in China except in such areas as have been banditridden. He added that the progress of the church in making a real place for herself in the foreign field has been tremendous.

Relief Probed In Richmond

Council Refuses June Aid; Report Beneficiaries Refuse Jobs.

Richmond, June 13 (Spl.).—An investigation of the local relief situation may be demanded on the floor of the city council, it was indicated today, after the board of aldermen failed to provide any relief funds for June and approved a $25,000 appropriation, little more than enough to care for the outstanding grocery bills of the social service bureau.

That relief costs show no decline even in the summer months, that it is difficult to secure relief workers although there is plenty of work to do, and that some of the families on the relief rolls have been employed while they were given relief and others who were offered the opportunity to work have declined the jobs, are the chief causes of dissatisfaction.

A conference has been called for Friday, when an attempt will be made to divert some of the money the city appropriates for relief to projects that will give work to the "white collar" class.

While swimming in the Rappahannock River near the Falmouth Bridge here they saw a bottle in a motorboat containing what "looked like whisky."

"We took a healthy swig," one related later, but in a few moments the two colored youths, Clifford Jones and Norris Henderson, were prostrate. They were taken to the hospital, where it was found they had consumed some kind of a gasoline mixture.

The white boy, whose name was not learned, was not so strongly affected and struck out for home. When picked up and detained by Sheriff W. C. Curtis, he said he had drunk about "a thousand gallons of river water and the stuff about burned me up."

Farce—In The Upshot.

An incident which brought battleships into play, and dangerously extended existing friction between China and Japan, now turns out to be a comedy fit for light opera. Those who were not immediately involved can enjoy a good laugh over the burlesque ending of the search for Vice Consul Kuramoto. But it is impossible to escape the very grim realization that this trivial incident might have resulted in international tragedy.

Mr. Kuramoto disappeared last Friday. Since he was a Japanese official in the Chinese capital suspicions were immediately aroused. Japanese warships converged upon Nanking. Armored tanks, followed by troops, rumbled through the streets of Shanghai. Tension was accentuated and new guards were thrown around the homes of Japanese officials in China. The Japanese foreign office, seldom lacking in presumption when China is concerned, announced that Japan would hold the Chinese government responsible for Kuramoto's disappearance "and for all the consequences arising from it."

In the midst of these alarming preparations, local farmers found the missing Japanese consul unkempt and starving in a Nanking cemetery, beside a tomb of the Ming dynasty. Thither, seemingly acknowledging the Chinese origins of Japanese culture, he had gone to commit suicide because he had failed to achieve promotion in the consular service.

Fate turned an incipient crisis into farce. But the world will note that the farce was very near tragedy. And it will recall from this incident that Japan started her aggressions in Manchuria on evidence as unproven as that which indicated that the Chinese were responsible for Mr. Kuramoto's disappearance.

Still Hazardous.

Two tragic accidents call attention rather poignantly to the hazards still encountered in air transportation. In the western Catskills of New York an airliner bound for Chicago crashed into a mountain side, killing seven occupants. A Pan-American plane en route to Santiago from Buenos Aires plunged into a lake with five casualties. It may be significant that both of these accidents were due to fog and inclement weather.

Remarkable progress has been made in eliminating the hazards of aviation in recent years. Yet one must admit that the airplane is still a dangerous means of travel. Fog can not be eliminated, and even with instruments to make blind flying practical, pilots sometimes find themselves helpless amid the clouds. The question naturally arises as to how far invention can be successful in coping with hazards of this sort.

In a recent article in the American Mercury, Kenneth Brown Collings concludes that "a given hour spent as a passenger-carrying pilot in scheduled air-transport operation is about 88 times more likely to result fatally than that same hour spent in normal ground occupations." There is no reason to accentuate this gloomy view. It is unfair, of course, to compare the safety of an airplane with that of one's office or bedroom. In comparison with other media of travel the transport plane makes a much better showing. Moreover, the airplane has a record superior to either the railroad or automobiles so far as killing pedestrians is concerned.

Yet the possibility of a tragic ending is always present when a man-made machine ascends into the clouds to attain speed. Dramatic tragedies of this sort are part of the price the human family doubtless will continue to pay for the almost incredible advances made in rapid transportation.

Less Light All Around.

Washington will take its place among the poorly-lighted cities of America on July 1. According to Walter E. Kern, District electrical engineer, the reduced candlepower made necessary by a $68,700 slash in the lighting appropriation will put Washington well below the standards of many comparable cities.

In a few sections the intensity of street lights can well be reduced. Some of the circles in residential areas, for example, use more light than is necessary. But other streets have insufficient light already. When the contemplated program is put into effect many streets will be in virtual darkness. All sections of the city will be affected to some extent by this curtailment. Candlepower in the downtown area will be reduced by almost half, in other sections the intensity of lighting will be diminished from 28 to 50 per cent.

Municipal lighting is a safeguard against both accidents and crime. Apparently Congress gave only superficial attention to this fact, but students of the subject trace a direct relationship between the prevalence of burglary and the inadequacy of street lighting. It is an indisputable fact that pedestrians encounter more hazards when intersections are only dimly lighted. Consistency would have demanded an increase in the detective squad and of traffic police to offset the effects of the dim lighting ordered by Congress.

The New Debt Approach.

Secretary Hull's reply to the British war debt note marks an advance over previous communications on this subject in one respect only—it offers a definite suggestion concerning means of payment.

After rebuking the British Government for failing to take the initiative in this respect the Secretary said that "no proposal has ever been presented to this Government looking toward payments in kind." The British contention that the United States must be prepared to receive goods if we wish to be paid is thus conceded by implication. However, the Administration still has much to learn about the complexities of the debt problem. Otherwise it would not assume that "payments in kind," whether to cover all or part of the bill, provide a satisfactory means of solving the transfer difficulty.

A considerable part of Germany's reparations payments were made in the form of deliveries in kind. According to the Dawes Plan experts these shipments "in their financial effects are not really distinguishable from cash payments, and they can not in the long run exceed the true surplus of German production over consumption available for export without either upsetting the exchange or rendering foreign loans necessary." In other words, when goods are delivered directly to discharge a government obligation, they tend to take the place of goods that would be exported in regular commercial dealings. As a result, the exchange reserves out of which payments on debt account must be made are correspondingly reduced, unless replenished by fresh borrowing.

The abnormal conditions that followed the Great War were favorable to the establishment of a system of deliveries in kind because there was a scarcity of certain basic commodities that Germany could supply, and an extraordinary demand for construction materials to rebuild the devastated areas. Yet even under such conditions, complaints were heard because German deliveries competed with domestic goods in countries in receipt of reparations.

If the British government were to follow the German example, taking care to confine deliveries in kind to products that the United States does not produce at all or only in insufficient quantities, American business would have no cause to complain of unfair competition. Nevertheless, our exporting industries would be injured by such deliveries because the British government would pay in sterling for the goods shipped here, and British exporters would no longer receive direct payments in dollars which could be used to purchase American goods in exchange.

In short, commercial goods shipments involve exchanges which benefit exporters in all trading countries since they create credits which result in offsetting purchases. Deliveries in kind, on the other hand, are one-way shipments which may benefit certain classes of exporters of the debtor country, but tend to undermine the foundation of a healthy foreign trade based upon an exchange of goods against goods.

It is ironical that a Secretary of State who has fought so valiantly and successfully for the principle of reciprocity in trade and tariff negotiations should place his signature on this recommendation for payments in kind. If debtor governments were seriously to consider the proposal, the noncompeting and mildly competitive commodities which would be suitable for tariff bargaining would be the "kind" selected. Thus, our sadly shrunken foreign trade would be further disorganized and Secretary Hull's plans for reviving it would be largely nullified in advance. Returns to the United States Government from sales of delivered goods would provide some revenue for the Treasury and to that extent might lighten the tax burden created by foreign defaults. Against that uncertain gain, however, must be set the certain loss that would follow from the depressing effects of deliveries in kind upon our export trade.

By its omissions, the debt note indicates that the State Department does not wish to confront the economic consequences of its own proposals. Moreover, in its positive reassertion of the unconditional character of the British promise to pay, it has refused to face political realities, and has sown more seeds of international discord. If this debt message is to be our last word on the subject, the prospect of a constructive settlement of this controversial issue appears to be quite as remote as ever.

The German Crisis.

It has been predicted that Germany will today announce a complete suspension of payments on her long-term foreign debts, including the Dawes and Young plan loans, on which interest has hitherto been met in full. The explanation of the present crisis is simple: German exports have fallen to a very low level as a result of foreign boycotts and growing competition from countries with depreciated currencies. Imports, however, have not declined correspondingly, since buying has been stimulated by the expansionist policies of the Nazi government and because of recent improvement in business. As a result the favorable merchandise balances of last year were converted into a deficit in the early months of 1934.

In spite of a partial moratorium upon debt transfers and increasingly severe restrictions upon import buying, Germany's gold and foreign exchange reserves have continued to shrink. The country has lost 260,000,000 gold marks during the past five months and now holds a negligible gold reserve of approximately half that loss—a reserve which will soon be exhausted, unless further safeguards are imposed to prevent its dissipation.

The desperate character of the situation is revealed by the fact that imports are said to be less at the present time than during the blockade days of the World War, while goods are tied up in transit, because importers have no means of making payment. Since Germany is dependent upon imports to meet a large part of her requirements for essential raw materials, and foodstuffs, it is evident that the commercial isolation which threatens her will have a seriously depressing effect upon domestic industry.

It is rumored that devaluation of the mark may be decreed in an endeavor to stimulate exports. The economic effect of a formal declaration would probably not be of great importance. Nevertheless, the possibility of such action creates nervousness in neighboring gold-standard countries which fear "runs" upon their reserves in case the mark is devalued. Consequently, an announcement from Dr. Schacht, the head of the Reichsbank, is awaited with considerable anxiety, although Germany's long-term creditors are more or less resigned to the prospect of receiving little or nothing on current account for the immediate future.

Labor's Worst Enemy.

There is no question that the Washington Master Builders' Association is justified in its decision to revert to an open-shop basis. And misguided attempts to block that policy by violence can only serve further to blacken the poor case of the carpenters' union

For months important building projects have been held up by repeated jurisdictional disputes between the building crafts, on top of which has come the carpenters' strike for a 30-hour week at the excessive hourly wage rate of $1.37½. The refusal of the union to settle this strike on the very generous terms offered by the contractors, a refusal due to the attitude of "floaters" rather than Washington craftsmen, has completely forfeited organized labor's claim to community sympathy in this issue. As a result, government building projects in Washington are likely to cease to be the stronghold of organized labor which they have been since wartime days.

The frequent indifference of organized labor to any but the most selfish and short-sighted interests is well revealed by this local situation. At the very moment that the steel workers are considering a strike against the open shop in that industry, the local building crafts decide to give an object lesson of the intolerable abuses to which the closed shop may be subject. And at a time when organized labor is seeking to obtain governmental support for its cause through the pending Wagner bill, the building trades proceed to build up a strong case against the closed shop even on governmental contracts.

Nor is that all. The building trades have chosen to exhibit their antisocial viewpoint just as pressure is being exerted to rush the Administration's new housing program through Congress. One tendency of that legislation would be to freeze labor costs in the building industry at the impossible levels at which trade-union action seeks to maintain them.

How to prevent that freezing tendency has been a source of anxiety to proponents of the housing bill, and they have sought cooperation from labor to secure employment for many at a reasonable wage rate, instead of for a handful at inflated figures. Assurances of such cooperation appear to have been made. But in view of inability to settle the local strike on a rational basis it is obviously dangerous to advocate the housing bill on such vague assurances alone.

For complete stupidity the recent attitude of the building-trades unions in Washington is hard to parallel. They have not merely jeopardized the interests of their own membership. They have also thrown into bold relief the underlying weaknesses of the A. F. of L. at the very worst psychological moment.

What The Dickens?

Never inconsiderable, the romance of the mint julep has just received one more sprig of garniture—and grown, if you please, in this vicinity. It is found in the discovery at Athens, Ga., of an 1868 letter to Charles Lanman, of our own Georgetown, wherein the writer commemorates a Baltimore julep consumed in company with Washington Irving. And the writer is Charles Dickens.

It seems he was in Baltimore—just about to leave, by the way, for those regions where the American scenes of "Martin Chuzzlewit" were later laid—when Irving came from New York to see him. "Some unknown admirer," says Dickens, "sent to the hotel a most enormous mint julep. . . . It filled a quite respectable-sized round table; . . . and it held out far into the night."

This was these authors' last meeting, and Dickens declares that, thereafter, his memory never saw Irving "otherwise than . . . bending with his straw, with an attempted gravity, after some anecdote involving some wonderfully droll and delicate observation; . . . then his eyes caught mine, melting into that captivating laughter of his which was the brightest and best I ever heard."

A pleasant picture, this: pleasant for the civic prides of Baltimore and of Georgetown; pleasant for all who share these two authors' admiration of a famous American beverage. But we wish the letter were more explicit. We should like to know whether it was a recollection of the next morning after that Baltimore night which moved Dickens to castigate America in "Chuzzlewit." And we do believe that its writer ought to have told us which side he and Irving favored in the perennial controversy as to the serving of juleps with the mint bruised, or with its green sprigs unbroken.

The upturn in business seems to me world wide. Soon the nations will be in position to quit quarreling and go to fighting.

A woman novelist, now 80, says she will exert every effort to live to be 100. Many have died trying to do this.

An Eastern judge punishes drunks by giving them castor oil. But what is castor oil to one who can drink blended whisky?

It would seem that Darrow believes in Darwin's theory of evolution, but not in Roosevelt's.

"Cursed With Good Looks."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
May I express through your columns my thanks to the United States Senate for the opportunity recently afforded the women of Washington to gaze upon a handsome man? If one may judge from press comments, this seems to have been the chief accomplishment of the Tugwell hearing.

Congressional standards of beauty are not high; nor, by and large, are those of most groups of American men. Has it come to this, then, that the Senate must stage a heresy trial in order to gratify our poor starved women's natural desire to feast their eyes?

The pity is that so few women availed themselves of the privilege so graciously granted. Though many writers have alluded to the tremendous turnout of women to see their matinee idol, the most casual glance at photographs of the hearing will show that men well outnumbered them.

Some of us attended the inquisition because it promised a morning's amusement—and in this we were not disappointed. The fact that the witness proved easy on the eyes was a pleasant by-product which did not detract from the diverting character of the day; but part of the pleasure was indirect. It was interesting to note the baleful glances of many of the men present, which seemed to indicate resentment that any American male should look so cool and well set up on a summer's day as the victim undeniably did.

A stranger beside me kept growling and gritting his teeth. He was obviously hostile to Dr. Tugwell. "These young theorists!" he would mutter, scornfully. "They've no business in the Government!"

He went on to point out that the South was trying in this way to warn President Roosevelt that he must not go too far to the left. "But," he exploded in bitter conclusion, "the girls started all this mess. They kept saying Tugwell was so darned good looking!"

In view of this distressing situation, can't we get up a campaign to relieve the poverty of masculine beauty in this country? It's really too bad for a man to have to spend four or five hours on the griddle just because he is cursed with good looks. If male beauty were less rare, no such stir would be created by it. Capital Punishment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Through the medium of your excellent paper permit me to say that too much praise can not be given Robert Quillen's fine article of June 8 entitled "Capital Punishment Assures Bandit Shall Kill No More."

Capital punishment is, indeed, a shocking thing, but not as much so as the killing or mutilating of innocent people. Life imprisonment means nothing more or less than pardon, parole or shooting their way to freedom by these bandits, leaving them to pursue their old life of murder, kidnaping, robbery, &c. So in the face of all this disregard of law and justice let us have capital punishment, which assures us that culprits so punished will at least commit no more dreadful crimes and America will be that much safer for innocent human beings. In Defense of Mr. Bargeron.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
I just have to hasten to the defense of Carlisle Bargeron after reading Eli Applebaum's letter in The Post of June 10. Don't ever discontinue "Along the Potomac," or else you lose this subscriber.

I, like F. L. H., think his sarcasm is delightful and surely fits the shoe when needed. My regards to such a high-class journalist.

The War Debt Situation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
The war debt situation is a bad mess. The fault is not exclusively on either side. The people of the United States have been so occupied with their own personal troubles that they seem incapable of constructive thinking on international problems. Nor has there been any indication of special wisdom on the part of members of Congress.

The peace of Versailles was a poor and unfair makeshift. If Germany had paid the assessed indemnities, and if business over the world had gone on as though nothing had happened, the allies might have paid their war debts. But the first could not be, the second was impossible in the nature of things, so the third was equally out of the question.

It was after the war had become of vital concern to ourselves—we were told that Germany intended conquering us after England was subdued—that the greater part of these loans were made. We were, in reality, no longer neutral. We were friends of the allies, and considered Germany our enemy.

The greatest tragedy of this debt matter is the international ill will that has been engendered. Millions of Europeans dislike their "Uncle Shylock."

Thank you for your excellent editorial, "Honor Unaffected," of June 7. You are right. England has not dishonored herself in refusing further payments "until it becomes possible to discuss an ultimate settlement of international governmental war debts with a reasonable prospect of agreement."

Meddling in Foreign Affairs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
For almost a century, the natives and assimilated peoples of our country have pa ently suffered the tumult and shouting of minority groups that take out their grudges against foreign nations and states by stirring up our country. It is high time that we begin to reserve our strength for our own purposes and that we insist that guests of the Nation settle down to American life and cease meddling in foreign affairs. A person is either an American or not. If he is, he ought not to bring European national and racial problems to our shores.

This present meddling in German affairs is a direct result of the insistence and political pressure of a relatively small but highly self-conscious group. It is not our place to fight German policies that do not concern us as a nation. Germany carries on no discrimination against Americans and if she should it would be time enough to take action, as we did in 1917.

Let it not be forgotten that Germans have helped to people and cultivate our country and that they have always gone voluntarily and bravely to our wars. When we consider the vast German population of our land during the late war and the little trouble they caused us we can only be proud of them.

Let things German be settled in Germany; let things American be settled in America; and let those who can not keep the dignity and peace in America, go where the supposed battle rages.

Bank Receiverships.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
As a patient, needy, long-suffering depositor I am wondering if the Comptroller of the Currency thinks his only duty is to appoint deserving Democrats receivers to draw huge salaries. The Federal American was held insolvent over a year ago and as yet no assessments against stockholders. Why this inexcusable, almost criminal delay? Would your progressive paper help us? E. FRANKLIN.

Foreign Debts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Noting your remarkable editorial against Europe paying its own debts, there is just one answer. Europe will pay the debts or the American taxpayer will pay them. Changing Language.

A writer in the Indianapolis News notes how French names have become Americanized in Indiana, as well as other States where Frenchmen of the period of exploration have left memorials. The French named the Wabash Ouabache, and gave Terre Haute (its name, afterward corrupted in sound to Terra Haute. The French pronounced it "Tare 'Ote" but Indianans call it Terry Hut, or Terry for short. "Some years ago," says the Indianapolis writer, "a Chicago paper tried to change back to French the pronunciation of names of several cities in Michigan, Illinois and Indiana, but failed from the start. Joliet, for instance, was to be changed from 'Jollyet' to 'Zhole-ay.'" The local people had other things to think about and did not have time to dally with the reform.

Kansas has not many old French names, the best one being the Marais des Cygnes. Neither the name nor its pronunciation has gone through any alterations in 75 years, but proof readers regularly have trouble in preventing it from appearing as Marias instead of Marais. Some American geographical names in this and other States lack the distinction of old Indian names. We have a lot of names like Jonesboro, Brownsville, Garden City, Smith Center and so on, but they neither look nor sound as well as Wyandotte, Kansas, Wichita, Abilene, Topeka, or even Medicine Lodge or Elkton, or recall such images. Nobody can dispute that Marais des Cygnes is a beautiful name.

A distinguished Kansan of half a century ago, Gen. Caldwell, soldier, diplomat and scholar, used to defend Americanization of foreign names and words, like Wabash from Ouabache. A language, he claimed, is entitled to adapt words from other languages and change them to suit its taste. He cited "prestige" as an example, and declared that the proper American or English way to pronounce it is with the hard "g" instead of the soft French, and shorten the vowel. Languages have their own character, and softness is a quality of the French. The greatest of European philologists, himself a Dane, admires English as the most masculine language and describes Latin languages as feminine. There are relatively few diminutives in English, compared with the French and other Latin tongues. For example, there is a good English word, "crisp," but advertising sharks who appreciate the feminine importance in advertising print it "crispy," and so with a lot of similar words. There is a trend to feminize English, but it is compensated by the accessions that slang introduces, which are usually male words.

Is Art Going Fascist?

Postoffice, Thursday.

YOU can say it lots of ways.

If you want to speak Mencken's—not Thomas Jefferson's — "American Language," you'll say: "It is too bad that politics should affect art, but they do."

If you want to be in the Addisonian tradition, you will say: "It is too bad that politics should affect art, but politics does."

And if you merely lack moral courage, you'll say: "It is too bad that politics should affect art, but such is the case."

Anyhow, such is the case, and always has been.

Politics affected the sculpture of Praxiteles and Goujon, the painting of Parrhasios and Pinturicchio. In our own day, Communistic political theories affected Rivera and all his imitators. Now that Fascism is having a little better time in the political world than Communism is having, we begin to wonder whether Fascism isn't affecting our most modern moderns.

By "Fascism" we don't, here and now, mean Hitlerism. We mean something more assured and—if we may so employ the word—"arrived."

Communism is either an experiment which has failed or an experiment still in the making—according as you are an anti-Communist or a Communist. At their beginning, history shows, an artist young in age or spirit is easily influenced by such movements, which, however, lose their art-influence when they remain too long in the uncertain and experimental stage, regaining it only if they gain certitude. Hitler's brand of Fascism, in its relation to even German art, has already followed a course similar to Communism's, for similar reasons.

So, by "Fascism," we mean a Mussolinism or the dictatorship of a Pilsudski order. We mean a Fascism that, for good or ill, is at all events strong, assured and secure as any political system ever is.

Communism gave its disciples in art a touch never confident and always (truly or falsely) prophetic rather than immediate. We wonder if we can't detect among some of our relatively newer artists a surer touch and a vision that surveys and interprets the contemporary scene in terms broad enough to include the elder traditions, as well as the present possibilities, of dictatorship.

Thomas Benton's murals are our best instance. So his already well-known "Politics and Education" furnishes us our best argument.

Here the student-figures, despite their costumes, are of all time. On the other hand, the torchlight procession is frankly historic, an evocation of the Presidential campaigns of our youth. Yet the artist's technique is the technique of today—if not, indeed, of tomorrow—and the sympathetic finger is evident in every line of its draughtsmanship.

Even such a radical as Thomas Craven—radical, at least, in art-criticism—sees something of this in his just published "Modern Art" (Simon & Schuster). Craven says:

"His (Benton's) art is too specifically real, too deeply impregnated with what I shall risk calling the Collective American Spirit, to touch the purists . . . and doctrinnaires . . . Benton's art, apparently, is a direct representation of American life."

To be sure, Mr. Craven is not red-haired for nothing, and not for nothing was he born in Kansas of the cyclones. This, his second book, follows logically its predecessor, "Men of Art"—is a detonating development of his pet thesis that "art should be representative and born of a passion to interpret life."

He will not inspire credence among plenty of us when he asserts that the works of such Impressionists as Manet and Monet, Whistler and Pisarro, possess only a genuine cash-value of $50—or less—apiece, and that Matisse is "a rug-maker" whose "emotion is but another name for bourgeois well-being." There will arise as many doughty dissenters from his declaration for Epstein as there may be advocates for his high valuation of George Grey Barnard—whom Rodin envied!

Nevertheless, Mr. Craven is "a critic not to be sneezed at by the other artistic rainmakers—when he lets politics alone. And there stands that dictum of his about what the art of the sculptor and the painter ought to be. You may differ from him in this. You may argue—as we do, after hours—that the art of a true artist may frequently be something else than an interpretation of life. Yet you will find it difficult to deny that that is what the art of many of our contemporary painters and sculptors really is.

Well, hasn't Mr. Craven missed much of the spirit they are interpreting? Hasn't he, anyhow, mistaken it?

The Americans among them are American: yes. But don't they share a fundamental something in common with their brothers abroad? And isn't this something a Fascist apprehension of the thing they interpret?

Fascism may be wrong or right; that is beside our question. Our question is: Doesn't these artists' passion to interpret life see the life they interpret as an existence tending toward Fascism? Do they not, mistakenly or truly, consider Fascism itself as "representative"?

But don't you go quoting this as a statement!

It is a question—not an answer.

Easily Impressed.

I AM not one of those who think that it makes the slightest difference in the world whether Prof. Tugwell is given a higher title and an increase in salary. In itself it will have absolutely no bearing on the more abundant life, except Prof. Tugwell's. It would be something to think about should the so-called clarification bill be passed giving him, Secretary Wallace and Jerome Frank the authority they seek, but this does not now seem likely to happen.

BARGERON.

In the absence of this additional authority he will probably be nothing more than the provocation he has been so far, and which Mr. Roosevelt by elevating him apparently wants him to continue to be.

* * * *

But I am afraid he is coming to have a dangerous influence on some of our Senators. They are going in more and more for wisecracking which is a very pronounced characteristic of the Young Liberals. They can turn more pretty phrases than you can shake a stick at, and no one laughs more heartily at these sayings than they themselves.

My fear is that they are leading some of the Southern Senators, particularly, astray. Associating with the Young Liberals as they have been, they have come to echo their witticisms, their retorts and their shafts. They are getting so, for that matter, that they speak the Young Liberals' language.

An observer of the committee hearing of the professor Monday couldn't escape this. Never have I seen old George Norris cut up as he did. I'll declare, he said one funny thing after another, he and Burt Wheeler and Murphy, of Iowa. They just kept the crowd laughing all the time. And now that Murphy has started he apparently intends to keep it up. Maybe he thinks he has hit upon his forte, I don't know. Anyway he was quoted yesterday as saying "Tugwell's mistake was that he wrote a book. Apparently some people consider that dangerous to American institutions."

Oh, the irony in this! Murphy is a card.

* * * *

It's Senator Bankhead that I am really worried about, though. The other fellows will probably be able to get by with their wisecracks. But they are doing Bankhead an injustice when they encourage him to go in for them. He is going to have enough trouble when the implications of his compulsory cotton act become known. A section of the country where they used to have to call out the State militia to enforce tick eradication laws does not easily adapt itself to such compulsion as the cotton act calls for.

It may be, though, that he didn't intend his utterance of yesterday to be a wisecrack. Maybe he intended it as profound analysis. Said he: "Tugwell made a splendid impression Monday. I think his frank statements caused several who were in doubt to vote for him."

* * * *

Now if the Senator really wasn't trying to be funny when he said this, if he was really sincere, it would be interesting to have him point out just which particular statement of the professor's was impressive, and at just what point in his examination he was frank.

I think this is important if the Senator is sincere in that it will reveal how little it takes to impress him. Seasoned newspapermen who covered the hearing were unanimously of the opinion that Tugwell "got off" all right, that he got by without getting scorched in the slightest. But I don't think any of them were impressed, nor did he register a "splendid impression" on any of them.

Speaking comparatively this might be the case: He unmistakably made a "splendid impression" as compared with the Senators, but to say this is to make a decidedly qualified statement. Nobody connected with that hearing made any "splendid impression" except on himself.

No Stigma on Britain, Debt Writer Asserts

London Journalist Sends Views to The Post; Declares It Would Be Unfair for U. S. to Collect Bills When the British Can't.

The following article, presenting the British viewpoint on that nation's war-debt default, was written for The Post prior to Secretary Hull's note of Tuesday. That note, however, gives its analysis of our major debtor's attitude particular timeliness. The author is a frequent contributor to leading British periodicals, and has recently returned to his own country after a lecture tour in the United States.

Frank Darvall.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London, June 13.

THERE is practically no serious criticism of the British Government's action in defaulting on the annuities due to the United States in respect of war debt on June 15. It is generally felt that the fault for this admittedly deplorable state of affairs is not Britain's.

It would have been almost impossible for the British Government to have got a majority for payment in full at this time, with no prospect of receipts from Britain's debtors and with no certainty of an agreed settlement within the near future. A token payment would have been gladly made if it had served to keep the matter open, to avoid the stigma of default, and to grease the way to a final settlement. But if a token payment were to be accounted default, as we were assured it would be, there was no purpose in anything less than payment in full.

The British View of the debt question is so different from the American that Mr. Chamberlain's and Mr. Roosevelt's views as to what would constitute a fair settlement would appear to be irreconcilable. The average Englishman fastens on two things particularly in connection with the debt.

First, that it is manifestly unfair that Britain should continue paying the United States when it is wholly improbable she herself will ever collect anything to speak of from her own debtors, or that the United States will ever succeed in getting many of her other debtors to pay up.

Second, that it is in the long run impossible for a country whose balance of trade with the United States is always unfavorable, and whose imports into the United States are rigidly limited by the high American tariff, to pay so huge a debt in the only way in which it can be paid, in dollars or in gold.

They Can't Understand U. S. Views on Their Surplus.

MOST Englishmen are wholly unable to understand the relevance to the problem of the points which American opinion, and the American President, have been advancing, regarding the size of the British surplus, and the way the British are spending their sterling balances on internal debt repayment and in other, and in some cases, unproductive ways.

They likewise regard as irrelevant references to the legality and justice of the debt and statements that if Britain does not pay, the U. S. Government will have to tax United States citizens in order to pay American owners of Liberty bonds. Many Englishmen understand and sympathize with America's difficulties. They would in the same position feel bitter and rightly aggrieved. But they do not feel that these difficulties have any relevance to the fundamental facts.

Few people doubt Britain's capacity to make the present and perhaps some few succeeding payments. Many are worried, however, lest the buying of such huge sums of gold or dollar exchange may not merely unduly depress sterling, but also dangerously inconvenience the few remaining gold countries. No one seriously doubts Britain's capacity to accumulate for the full term of the original funding agreement the necessary sterling balances in London. But many feel that she could only do so by maintaining a burden of taxation so high that, as Senator Glass has said, any Congressman recommending such a thing in the United States would be in danger of being lynched.

Few people question the legality, and even morality, of the original agreement, although many feel that to wipe the slate clean would have benefited not merely the world but also the U. S. A. No one doubts the real distress of the United States at the present time, or fails to sympathize with her annoyance at having to forego the $300,000,000-odd which she might normally have expected on account of war debts.

But everyone doubts the wisdom of making the present payment, whether in dollars or in sterling, lest it create a precedent for a re-establishment of the whole pre-depression debt structure. Everyone doubts the possibility of safely transferring such huge sums from sterling to dollars over the period of the original agreement, and therefore favors readjustment. Everyone feels that Britain has been particularly harshly treated in the whole debt matter, and can not be expected alone to shoulder these distressing burdens.

Britons Assert Belief United States Wanted Default "Solution."

WHAT has inclined many British people to default, from which they would otherwise mostly shrink in horror, has been the growing conviction that, whether the British case was appreciated in America or not, there was no political possibility of a settlement based upon it being ratified by Congress. England has gradually been convinced that most Americans would prefer solution by way of default to solution by way of an agreed settlement. People on this side of the Atlantic gradually have come to feel that the only agreed settlement which would stand a chance of adoption in Congress would be one ignoring altogether difficulties of transfer, or the injustice of collecting debts from Great Britain when the latter was unable to collect her debts from her former allies and from Germany.

Such a settlement, allowing merely for readjustments on the basis of capacity to pay, and, perhaps, a limited power to postpone transfers when their effect on the exchanges would be particularly disastrous, would be wholly unacceptable to Britain. It would seem to most Englishmen to ignore the realities, and also the equities, of the situation. It would involve burdens upon them far greater than any would think fair or safe.

It is this view almost certainly as well as a feeling that it would be undignified for a country like Britain to make a concrete offer which might be refused, which has prevented the British government from following up Mr. Roosevelt's repeated hints that debtors desiring readjustments should make definite proposals. Of what use would it be, even if it were usual and proper in such matters, for a debtor thus openly to offer his creditor anything less than payment in full without an assurance that such lesser offer would be favorably received?

Asserts Token Payments Could Have Gone On.

PEOPLE in Europe, even amongst that section which is really anxious to secure an agreed settlement and hates the idea of default, are coming to despair of such an agreement. To attain it they made a full payment in December, 1932, and token payments in June and December, 1933, and would have gone on making token payments if the United States had been willing to receive them and not to regard them as in default. Throughout they have been repeatedly requesting readjustment and have leapt to respond to every invitation to negotiate that has been offered them. They continue to remain open to invitations to negotiate. For they continue to want an agreed settlement. But they feel they are being forced into a situation where there is no alternative to default.

No hope is given them of an agreement. There is no likelihood that even payment in full on June 15 would increase the chances of an agreement. A token payment would be wholly useless. What choice have they but to default and, in doing so, again to reiterate their reasons for not paying in full and their anxiety to secure an agreement.

The Ringgold Music.

If fate, altogether too concerned over trivia, hadn't kept me up last night with a copy of the July issue of Esquire on my lap, I would have set down here very brightly and proudly some original remarks on the late Ring Lardner.

THEO. HALL

I'd have said of Ringgold (he was thus Christened in Niles, Mich., a proper interval after March 6, 1885) that, no matter how much of a social historian and philosophic commentator on life the pundits would make him out to be, he was never anything else but a humorist—"poor and simple," as he would have written it.

I'd have flung in a testy word that if any critic tried to prove that Lardner were a frustrated artist, pilloried on the commercial standard (as Van Wyck Brooks glibly described Mark Twain), I would be disposed to avoid said critic.

And I was also prepared to say that writers like H. C. Witwer and Sam Hellman made Lardner's famed command of American slang look pretty feeble. But where Lardner shines, absolute and single in this generation, is his hold on the rhythm and cadence of garden-variety American speech. The Ringgold music is as true as a mint dollar. No other body of recent work can equal, in this regard, the Ring of Nilesmichigan.

* * * *

But, as I have given notice, all this is only what I was going to say. For leafing blithly through the pages of Esquire, I was given considerable pause to discover that a little article by Gilbert Seldes mentioned each and every one of the above points. And quite adequately. The essays to prove "he was 'spoiled' as an artist because he succumbed to the American way of life," said Mr. Seldes, with commendable simplicity, "will make me sick."

The chair, I feel, should recognize Mr. Seldes. For the last few months he has been living in the midst of Lardneriana, of clippings and cuttings from magazines and newspapers, of the whole non-fiction output which flew from the Lardner typewriter during the past 20 years. A generous collection of the best of this he has placed in a book called "First and Last—Ring Lardner" (Scribner, $2.50)—a title you can put together or pull apart like an accordion. If I take a few quotations to do the latter to the book for a couple of minutes, you can put the gorgeous whole together when you have the volume on your own table.

* * * *

But come to think of it, no key signature or tempo marks or scoring is needed to recognize the peculiar Ringgold music. Try an item or two from "Symptoms of Being 35":

"The subject is woke up at 3 a. m. by the fire whistle. He sniffles but can't smell no smoke. He thinks well it ain't our house and goes back to sleep.

"He sets down after breakfast to read the paper. The mail man comes and brings him three letters. One of them looks like it was a gal's writing. He reads the paper."

* * * *

Or try his cock-eyed playlet, "I Gaspiri: or The Upholsterers" ("Act I: a public street in a bathroom"), which does surrealisme up brown, and begins—"First Stranger: Where was you born?"

Readers will note the identity of that dramatic line with the opening speech of Senator Smith in another little play performed last Monday morning, entitled "I Tugwell."

Or taste any of the parodies of Walter Winchell or O. O. McIntyre; or that hilarious piece of mockery, "The Young Immigrunts," patterned after Barrie's "The Coung Visiters;" or the sports stories, or the jibes at conversation, newspapers, numerology and jobs.

I liked best the little article called "Say It With Oil," which answers, tit for tat, Nina Wilcox Putnam's outrageous slings at husbands. "Wives," writes Lardner, "is people that always wants to go home when you don't, and vice versa.

"Wives is people that thinks 2 ash trays should ought to be plenty for a 12-room house.

"They are people who you get invited out somewheres with them and you ask them if they think you ought to shave and they say no, you look all right. But when you get to wherever you are going they ask everybody to please forgive Lute as he didn't have time to shave.

"They are people that never have nothing that is fit to wear.

"They are people that think when the telephone bell rings it is against the law to not answer it."

* * * *

If I suspect shrewd hitting here, I leave it to competent judges. But I do maintain that in Ring Lardner there lies a prime and gusty humor of a sort native to no other country but America, of a sort we have had here in distinguished succession since colonial days. (See, if you are curious, Constance Rourke's invaluable study, "American Humor.")

For the man behind the work one vulgar, but pithy, phrase is sufficient explanation—Lardner "gave a damn." And he merely chose to be funny about it. His last writings, the radio reviews for the New Yorker, make this only a little more plain than anything else in this crackajack of a book.

Intelligent Law-Makers Needed to Rule

By Robert Quillen

Typical modern parents are ashamed and afraid to use the word "sin" in the presence of their children.

They labor and sacrifice to give their children a "better chance" than they themselves had, yet fail to give them the one thing that will safeguard their lives.

In their teens the youngsters are yet unaware that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. They have learned the a-b-c of elemental science and discovered the theory of evolution.

This little equipment and the fact of controversy make them partizans of science. They endorse science without knowing anything about it, as their elders cheer a candidate without knowing anything about him. And having been told by the ignorant that science and religion are not to be reconciled, they assume that evolution eliminates God.

Such youngsters deserve pity, for they have been cheated. It would have been fairer to teach them nothing except to think for themselves.

For any intelligent person, without other equipment than his native common sense and the ability to reason, will follow logic to the fact of God.

It is obvious that the universe is ruled by intelligent laws. And where there is intelligent law, there must be an intelligent law-maker.

Once the mind comprehends the fact of a Creator capable of ruling the universe, awe and worship follow as a matter of course.

But understanding must come early, before the mind is warped by prejudice or closed by error.

You are told that many criminals had "religious training" which failed to save them. Well, does college training make all students intelligent and wise? Much depends on the trainer and the capacity of the student.

Exposure to training may do no good, but this much is certain: The youth who believes in God and therefore tries to serve Him does not become a drunkard, a sneak-thief or a bandit.

And a little science need not be a handicap. The honest scientist requires proof, but he doesn't assert that matter won't burn until he tries it.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

Prize Fighters.

There is no reason why a man of letters should not predict the winner of a heavyweight boxing match, even if his opinion be of little value. I therefore predict that Primo Carnera will defeat Max Baer this evening.

I remember Bernard Shaw predicted that the Frenchman Carpentier would easily defeat Jack Dempsey; and perhaps he made his prophecy simply because he felt more at home in minority opinion, where he has been all his life in other matters. Carpentier never had a chance.

I have known personally only three heavyweight champions and I have never seen a fight. The first time I saw Jim Corbett was only a few days after he had defeated the redoutable John L. Sullivan. Mr. Corbett gave an exhibition of his skill as a boxer and it was like magic. I should not have believed such speed with hand and foot, such absolute eye-judgement were possible, if I had not seen Corbett in action. He was undoubtedly the greatest master of the art of boxing the world has ever known; as Sullivan was perhaps the greatest fighter. Some years later I was dining in the Hotel Grunewald in New Orleans; Corbett entered the room and I said to my companion, "That's Jim Corbett!" The waiter thinking I had an appointment with him, brought him to my table; and we had some pleasant conversation. Then we shook hands and instead of squaring off for the first round we separated amicably. Corbett, even in a walk across the room, had the grace and ease of a panther.

It has been my good fortune to have as an intimate friend Gene Tunney, the only champion in history who retired from the ring undefeated. He would be worth knowing if he had never boxed at all, as he has a remarkable personality and an original mind. He is a natural student, and possess amazing powers of concentration. He made up his mind to become acquainted with the works of Shakespeare and began by reading "Winter's Tale" through carefully ten times; he studied boxing, physical condition, and his various opponents in the same thorough manner. On the day of the greatest fight of his career, the battle with Dempsey in Chicago, he had dinner at three o'clock, then sat down and read Somerset Maugham's novel "Of Human Bondage" for two hours, and forget he was to fight that evening. Tunney's autobiography is an admirable book.

I had the pleasure of meeting Primo Carnera at the Savoy Hotel in London. He impressed me as a big good-natured boy. When I told him I enjoyed the pictures he had drawn for an American newspaper syndicate, he laughed with tremendous gusto, as if it were the greatest joke he had ever heard. He has thus far lacked aggression in the ring; it is as if he feared he might hurt his opponent. But he has developed both as a boxer and as a fighter. He outboxed Loughran, a master of the art; and he outhit Sharkey. He has every qualification for the world's championship, except killing, an instinct possessed in the highest degree by Sullivan and Dempsey.

The most famous prize-fight in history was fought in 1860 in England between Bill Heenan the Benicia Boy from California, and Tom Sayers the Englishman; and although there were many spectators, nobody has ever been able to tell exactly what happened.

Mill Tied Up By Picketers In Martinsburg

Picketers, Armed With Old Eggs and Fruit, Ready to Fight.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 13 (Spl.).—Picketing followed a strike of Berkeley woolen mill employes here today and as a result the plant was idle, affecting 400 workers.

Workers said their walkout was in protest against alleged discrimination against union workers and a company policy of making operators tend two looms using mixed fillings, the latter involving the "stretch-out" problem.

Plant officials, from a conference in Washington, where the company also operates a plant, said they considered the question one of first determining what the employes were demanding and then of attempted adjustment. A company spokesman denied discrimination against union workers and also denied any "stretch-out" practice.

Picket lines were thrown about the plant and halted all workers from entering. They were prepared to use over-ripe fruit and eggs and solid objects with their oral arguments. Accredited office workers were permitted to enter the plant.

Workers said the management had refused to enter conference on the disagreements. The strike has been under discussion for weeks.

The same mill was tied up last August for some weeks by a strike laid to reemployment of discharged workers and to wage disagreements.

Rush D. Holt, West Virginia field adjuster for the NRA, was here in connection with the trouble last week.

Radio Waves and Ripples

GOLF is a game in which a modicum of conversation is normally quite agreeable to all concerned.

Possibly that explains why the brassie and niblick are the weapons chosen when the N. B. C.-C. B. S. competition takes an athletic turn.

Last summer Columbia issued the call to woods and irons. This year the challenge has come from National. There are several points of difference to be settled, but in general the question is: Who won last year? No one exactly remembers.

The tournament rules are quite simple. C. B. S. is to name the time and the place. And team memberships are to be limited to studio employes, a classification which, on this occasion, embraces Vice Presidents Frank Russell and Henry Bellows. That's to keep C. B. S. from ringing in Bing Crosby, or some other par-shattering crooner.

Jim McGrath has offered to wrestle any C. B. S. hand who plays golf the way he does.

The U. S. Navy has just settled a vexatious problem for C. B. S.

It—the problem—came up while Andre Kostelanetz was trying to build up a medley of Hawaiian tunes with the sound of surf breaking on the beach.

The Navy—two sailors—came in during rehearsal.

A production man thought a prolonged sssh would turn the trick.

An engineer held out for a quick shoosh.

Kostelanetz turned to the sailors. Had they been to Hawaii?

They had, indeed, and it was a long, drawn-out ssshish.

More Than "A Living" Social Conference's Aim

Miss Katherine Lenroot, New President of National Organization, Says Workers Want to Give Needy Persons Security.

AS A RESULT of relief projects begun by the Government since the depression, provision of more than the barest necessities for the needy is the present aim of welfare organizations. No longer satisfied with trying to provide the margin of help that gives poverty-stricken persons only bread and meat, social workers are now interested in means of establishing security for every person.

These are convictions of Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, recently elected president of the National Conference of Social Work at the annual meeting of the organization held recently in Kansas City.

The eighth woman in 61 years to receive this honor, Miss Lenroot has been with the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor since 1915, having been promoted through all the ranks and grades to her present position as assistant chief.

Change in Spirit

At her office at the Children's Bureau, Miss Lenroot told something of the change in spirit she had noticed at this year's conference in contrast to meetings of other years.

Harris & Ewing Photo.

SECURITY for the needy is the goal of welfare work, says Miss Katherine Lenroot, distinguished social worker.

"Provision of security for the needy seemed to be the keynote," she said. "For instance, many discussions were centered around housing projects whereby more comfortable living quarters could be provided."

Questions of methods of emergency relief—such as old-age pensions, widows' pensions, unemployment insurance and housing projects—were other subjects sifted at the conference, she said.

"Among the measures suggested for immediate relief was the revision of the poor laws, which still more or less follow the English system—and the establishment of a Federal welfare department.

Division of Wealth.

"The general opinion of those attending the conference seemed to indicate there would have to be more equitable division of wealth."

Miss Lenroot's election as president of the Conference of Social Work adds another to her long list of honors. In addition to her work as assistant chief of the Children's Bureau she has served as chairman of the United States delegations to the fifth and sixth Pan-American Child Congresses, has taken an active part in the work of the Council of the International American Institute for the Protection of Childhood, and has represented the United States at the international conference held in Europe.

Her election as president of the National Conference of Social Work marks the third office she has held in that organization. The presidency was previously held by the late Julia Lathrop, first chief of the Children's Bureau, and Miss Grace Abbott, the present chief.

The next annual meeting will be in June, 1935, in Montreal.

Prize Is Won, Then the Mail Starts to Flow

$250 Award Brings Demands for Charity on Recipient.

By Evelyn Voss Wise.

I WON a prize. Every so often I have heard announcements of prize winners over the radio and have wondered what it would be like to hear my own name mentioned as winning $500 or $1,000. I planned how I would spend it, just as if it had really come to me.

Then one evening I decided to try it.

"Just write in 100 words what you think of * * *" the announcer said.

I had never used the article, but from all that was said about it I felt I should be able to write something. I submitted my letter and forgot about it.

Weeks later I heard the announcer's voice. "Later, on this program, we shall give the names of the persons whose prize-winning letters have won awards."

I listened carefully.

"Fourth prize, $250," and he read my name. My knees were strangely weak. It wasn't the money so much as winning a prize.

Next day the check arrived and I put it into the bank. Then my correspondence began.

Lonely Young Men.

My first letter was from a marriage bureau. "We have hundreds of fine young men who wish to meet young women. * * *" For a small fee of $5 they would send me names and pictures of their clients, lonely handsome young men who wanted to correspond with charming women. I threw that one in the waste basket but noted the $5.

In the following mail were three letters. The first was from a religious organization—They were building a new chapel and were inclosing a stamped envelope in case I wished to contribute any sum I desired to their worthy cause. The second letter was from a clipping bureau, which for a small sum would send me a list of all current contests. A third was from the wife of a wounded war veteran. Her husband was unable to work and they were dependent on charity because they had several small children.

The Best Is Coming.

Within ten days I had 16 letters, from individuals to bond companies. When I added the amount asked, using $1 as a maximum gift to those needy ones, I totaled $276, $26 more than I had received.

But the best is often reserved for last, and so it was in this case From somewhere in New Jersey came a note from an Army corporal.

"Dear Evelyn," it began. "I've always wanted to meet some one who had won a contest and I want to offer you my congratulations. Couldn't you come up to * * * for a week-end? I know you would have a good time. I know lots of places to eat and dance, and I'm considered a very good dancer." He suggested I send him my picture and he'd send me one of his.

Needless to say, I did not answer his letter—I had a feeling he would have liked the entire amount. But I shall always wonder what happens when one receives a really large amount. And next time I shall put a "Mrs." before my name.

Life Expectancy Of Babies Grows

EACH three years of the twentieth century have added approximately an extra year to the life expectancy of the average newborn baby, Dr. Louis I. Dublin, third vice president and statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., says in a report on public health conditions now existing throughout the United States, as compared with those prevailing at the turn of the century. Babies born in 1900 could look forward to 49 years of life on to Dr. Dublin. In 30-odd years, he said, tuberculosis mortality has declined by more than 70 per cent and now ranks only seventh among diseases as a cause of death, while in 1900 it stood first.

SOOTHING TENANTS frightened by thunder storms, supervising furnace repairs, writing advertisements, and renting apartments are small items in the day's work of an apartment house manager, says Mrs. Frances Myer, who is seen showing an apartment to a prospective tenant. "But it is interesting work," she adds. "For the woman who has this job has both a home and a career."

The 'Real Washingtonian' Spends His Time Thus

At Coffee Time, It's the Belgian Embassy; Dinner, Perhaps, With the Mathews Dicks; a Glimpse at the Charles Bakers' Garden.

(Associated Press.)

HAT AND cane to the butler, cards in the silver bowl, and the day has just begun for the real Washingtonian.

Maybe it is coffee time, if the real Washingtonian's limousine is scheduled to pull up in front of the Belgian Embassy. Mme. Paul May, the hostess, stands in the soft yellow drawing room filled with white peonies, and shooes her guests on to the buffet lunch for iced coffee, a la Brussels, which is not thin and hot like our own nickel-a-cup, but thick and chilled and served in demi-tasse affairs.

Or maybe the real Washingtonian is scheduled for dinner with Mr. and Mrs. C. Mathews Dick.

Makes Party History.

Mrs. Dick's dinners run on oiled wheels. She warns her household staff, "No phone calls while the guests are here," and then turns her expert and gracious hand to making party history for the city.

The guests go into one of the most famous dinner tables hereabouts. It is black glass with a white glass pool in the center, surrounded by miniature palm trees, also made of glass. Tiny glass herons stand on one leg among the trees and look coldly on as each delectable course comes and goes.

Coffee and liqueurs are served in the drawing room. If afterward they go to the play room, which is done in cafe-au-lait leather, the newcomers are shown the mysteries of the music buttons. There is a series of them on one of the tables which turn on radios or victrolas in various rooms of the house.

The Bakers' Garden.

When Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Charles A. Baker entertain, the trick is to see the garden, a pocket-size garden with a blanket of white pebbles instead of a lawn, and tiny boxes of petunias and geraniums. After that small touch of Nature, then cocktails and hors d'ouevres.

At the Russian Embassy guests are still curious enough to traipse around and gape at the rugs, for instance, which are believed the finest collection in Washington.

Since the first fanfare, which included vodka, genial Ambassador Troyanovsky and his wife have settled down to Russian tea and caviar for the tea-time buffet. They are to be found in the wainscoted dining room on a table lighted with taper candles and decorated with bowls of roses.

But the real Washingtonian never really has been "out" until he has had dinner at the Chinese Embassy on one of those nights when pretty Mme. Sze decides to head the formal dinner table, loaded with pale pink peonies, in one of her picturesque pastel-colored Chinese gowns.

Colonial Home Exhibit to Help Fund of Scouts

Mrs. Flather's Tulip Hill Noted for Architecture and Garden.

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, Md., still boasts a number of stately old mansions laying claim to both interest and antiquity. One of the most beautiful and impressive of these, set in a grove of tulip poplars and appropriately called Tulip Hill, will be open to visitors on Saturday afternoon from 2 to 5 o'clock for the benefit of the Girl Scout camp scholarship fund.

Particularly notable for its architectural beauty and its garden, Tulip Hill was first the home of Samuel Galloway, the Quaker, whose religious affiliations did not lessen his desire to make his home one of the most beautiful in Maryland.

Distinctive Architecture.

Set well back from the road, this mansion has many distinctive architectural features. Its comparatively small portico has four tall pillars supporting a triangular canopy. Its tall chimneys, its triangular pediment that cuts the roof line, and its long facade are reminiscent of typical mansions of other days, while the plump Cupid embellishing its portico-canopy distinguishes it from the average eighteenth century mansion.

The garden doorway with its shell covering has attracted much attention and has been widely copied.

Mrs. Henry Flather, of Washington, the present owner of Tulip Hill, is responsible for the present beauty of the gardens. When she bought the estate 11 years ago, the holly hedge was a waste, the boxwood had been removed, and the scattered half-dead shrubs and flowers that remained were not hardy enough to make the otherwise bare garden attractive.

It's a Work, Even Men Admit, In Which Women Excel Them

A Girl Must Be Versatile to Qualify, Though; Mechanics, Advertising, Bookkeeping Are Just a Few of the Necessary Items of Knowledge.

Among the thousands of job-hunting graduates this June are those who frankly say:

"I am naturally domestic. My only talent is in housekeeping. How can I use this ability to make a living?"

It is good news for these girls to learn that business has a need for good housekeepers. Those same talents our grandmothers used to manage a dozen children can be utilized in managing apartments and offices. This, the fourth of a series of articles on careers for women, tells of the opportunities in business management.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

ONLY the stubborn sentimentalist today believes home is a vine-covered cottage.

The average person knows it is more likely to be a two-room apartment, and he often adds, "My office is my home, too. I spend a third of my life there."

This is hard on followers of John Howard Payne, but fine for the home-loving woman who wants a career.

For apartment houses and offices need managers. And women, even the men admit, excel as managers.

"Versatility is essential in order to be a good apartment-house manager," Mrs. Frances Myer, manager of Wakefield Hall, said yesterday. "The successful apartment-house manager must be home-loving, possess social graces, and be a good business woman.

"She must know about advertising and selling in order to rent her apartments. She must know bookkeeping to keep her accounts straight. She must be able to spend money where it will do the most good, and be able to make a profit for her employer. She must know something about mechanics so she can supervise repairs intelligently.

"And, above all else, she must know how to deeal with people. Most tenants seem to think apartment-house managers are there to answer all questions, help out in all emergencies, and we try to do those things.

"Yesterday I held a woman's hand because she was afraid of a thunder storm. Sometimes when a guest fails to appear I am called upon to make a fourth at bridge.

"One night the telephone rang and a voice said, 'You are supposed to be the manager around here, and I don't see any use in having a manager if she can't answer questions. Now tell me, how do you score at rummy?' These are only samples. One thing certain, the girl who goes into apartment house managing will never have a dull moment."

Constant interest and enthusiasm are the greatest aids to success in this work, Mrs. Marie Pierce, manager of two apartments on Connecticut avenue, believes.

Room for Expansion.

"The person who likes the work, and keeps her interest alive has a future in it," she said. "She can either take over more buildings, or use the training as a step toward hotel or institutional management.

"Patience and courtesy, and a sense of humor are necessary in this work," Mrs. Pierce added. "The best rule to follow is to run the apartment as if it were your own home and the people your guests.

"I think an important detail is in the selection and training of servants. System and regularity in training help, and in the delegation of work is essential to run a household smoothly.

Dr. Mary de Gamo Bryan, of the American Woman's Association, recently said household management offers many opportunities to women.

"Household management requires executive ability," she said, "and executive ability implies first of all an ability to like and work with people. Women are good executives. If they would get over the idea they are creative geniuses and get down to the business of running things, they would do extremely well."

Office Management.

Office management is one of the newest, most profitable field open to women, and present managers believe the future will increase opportunities in this line.

"Of course," Mrs. Emily J. Peifer, office manager of the Washington branch of the American Veneer Package Association, said yesterday: "A girl can't start out as office manager. A good office manager knows the business thoroughly, and that is usually learned in subordinate positions.

"She should have initiative in dealing with all problems; she should study to make desirable changes. She should be good-natured and cheerful to all visitors."

The manager of an office, Mrs. Peifer said, must create a happy, homelike atmosphere for the employes to work in.

"And above all else," she concluded, "she must learn not to let her time be taken up by small details. This is woman's greatest fault in business. She can not delegate responsibility to others. And that is essential to be a good executive.

PILLAR TO POST

Sigma Complications.

THE latch string always hangs out at the Bourden Scribeners' house for the Alpha Chi Sigmas. It was the cause of an amusing contretemps there last Sunday afternoon.

Jane and her brother Bourden, with Eddie Steiner and Rita Cochet, left early that day to go to Harpers Ferry and the senior Scribeners were out on some jaunt of their own. But somebody carelessly left the front door open.

• • • •

Frank Mansfield, arriving to pay his respects to the household, and receiving no response to his ring, tried the knob and walked into the living room. There he settled himself with the Sunday papers, preparing to wait for the return of the family.

• • • •

After a while he was startled to hear peculiar noises in the kitchen and his first idea was that someone was trying to break in the house in the absence of the family. Billy Caul, in the kitchen, hearing the rustling of papers in the living room, had the same idea. He had let himself in the kitchen door with the key that hangs in the secret place known to Alpha Chi Sigmas.

• • • •

Summoning the intrepidity for which he is famous, Billy made a dash for the living room, just as Frank, equally courageous, decided to investigate what was going on in the kitchen.

Dusky Nettie.

NOBODY has a better time at functions held at the National Woman's Country Club than Nettie, the maid Mrs. Charles McNary loans to the club on occasions.

• • • •

She is all over the place calling everybody "Babychile," no matter whether it is the stately Mrs. Carl Droop, the Persian Minister's young and pretty blonde wife, Mme. Djalal, or 14-year-old Peggy Townsend. Her white toothy grin is omnipresent, her laughter is loud, frequent and infectious as the mumps, and she bustles about on her large slew feet seeing to it that everybody is made as happy and comfortable as possible.

• • • •

Nettie's one grief is that the cast-off shoes of the dapper Senator McNary are too small for her to wear.

Women's Public Life Chances Seen as Grave Responsibility

WOMEN have greater opportunities in public life today than ever before. With these opportunities, however, have come grave responsibilities, requiring wide training. Such responsibilities constitute a challenge to every woman to prove her worth in the business and professional world

These deas were stressed by Miss Stella Akin, special assistant to the Attorney General, in her address to the Women's Conference of the American Institute of Banking at a breakfast yesterday at the Willard Hotel.

"It is well known that for the first time in history women have been given an equal representation in governmental affairs in our Capital City," said Miss Akin. "But with that representation comes a grave responsibility that makes constant training neressary. As representatives of our sex in banking you must realize that by accepting your duties you are hewing the path for younger business women."

Public Life Standard.

In this regard Miss Akin suggested all women in public life should establish standards and principles as a measuring rod for women starting out in the business world. These standards and principles, she said, could be established only by intensive training.

"In this present era of our Government," she went on, "we women who are actively engaged in gainful occupations should become Government-conscious. For women who are competent and public-spirited the opportunities offered in the business and political field are varied and interesting. We should take a more intelligent point of view toward the vast machinery of our Government, which is being used today for the benefit of the American people."

Need Better Training.

Pointing out woman's greatest problem at present is to prove her ability in public life, Miss Akin said the average woman's efficiency was largely dependent on her training.

"Education is needed more than ever before in our country today," she asserted. "If women have training and the ability, however, they can go far in any field of work they may choose to enter."

In substantiating this statemnet Miss Akin mentioned such outstanding women in public life today as Frances Perkins, Ruth Bryan Owen, Nellie Tayloe Ross, Marion Banister, Lucille McMillin, Mary Harriman Rumsey, Emily Newell Blair and others who have attained their present positions because they were prepared to fill them.

Education Delayed 18 Years, Graduate Leaves College Now

NEW YORK, June 13 (Spl.).—Probably the happiest member of this year's graduating class at Hunter College is Mrs. Mollie Arginteau Gair, mother of two children, who has obtained both her high school and college education since her marriage.

As a graduation gift from her husband, who has encouraged her consistently in her efforts to get an education, Mrs. Gair will receive a Mediterranean cruise.

When Mollie Arginteau was graduated from grammar school 24 years ago with highest honors she was ambitious to continue her education. But financial circumstances forced her to go to work to help support the family.

Later she married Harry A. Gair, attorney. Two children were born, Barbara and Donald. When Donald, the younger, was 3 years old Mrs. Gair decided she would return to school.

She completed the 8-year high school and college course in 6½ years, specializing in educational courses. She now intends to do graduate work in nursery school education, her experiences with her own children having fitted her particularly for such a career.

By systematizing her home management, Mrs. Gair has been able to pursue her studies and at the same time look after her children. Every morning she drives her children to school, then motors to Hunter College. In the afternoons the three do their homework. The children assist in the household, particularly on the maid's day off. Both children have shown marked literary and artistic ability.

Besides running her home and attending college, Mrs. Gair has found time to take up many other pursuits. Amateur dancing is one of them. She is an enthusiastic tennis player, and is well versed in current politics, music and art. In addition she is an excellent cook.

BOXWOOD, HOLLY HEDGES, AND A VARIETY of flowering plants make this garden on the Tulip Hill estate in Anne Arundel County one of the beauty spots of Maryland. Arranged in a series of terraces rising from the West River to the level of the mansion's foundation, these colorful gardens are a fitting contrast to the cool green tulip poplars that form a setting for the eighteenth-century house.

Beauty Served To an Empress Served to You

Catherine the Great's Products Are Sold in Improved Form.

By Ruth Ann Davis.

FOR generations an interest in the preservation of feminine beauty has been handed down in a noble Russian family. Years and years ago Count Arcadi Ivanovitch de M—— was first counselor to the crown on foreign affairs. The empress, Catherine the Great, knowing he was a man of vast scientific learning, commanded him to create some facial formulae for her. After the preparations were completed, she always referred to them as "my inseparable balms of youth." The formulae were handed down in the family and always the possessor was led to a further study of this fascinating subject.

At present the beauty secrets are in the hands of a great, great many "greats," granddaughter of the learned counselor. In her small laboratory in New York the preparations are compounded entirely by hand.

The entire line consists of skin cleanser, skin tonic, skin food and astringent. There is a liquid powder foundation, five exquisite shades of powder, compacts, lipsticks, rouge, eye shadow, mascara and sun tanning fluid.

The liquid skin cleanser is made of fine oils. It has an emollient quality that makes it especially suitable for sensitive skins. It should be followed by the skin tonic, which arouses the circulation and banishes sluggish, sallow conditions. The next step, the skin food, is designed to erase tiny lines around the eyes, fill out hollows, and round contours. A daytime treatment must always be followed by the astringent to keep the skin tissues healthy and firm and strengthen facial muscles.

This line enjoys an advantage of being short and complete. Its present perfection is due to the fact that since the time of Catherine the Great it has undergone one improvement after another.

This Linen Luggage

Now about this linen luggage. Scarcely a magazine or paper hasn't carried news about it: "Mr. and Mrs. So-and-So, seen leaving liner with snappy linen luggage in hand!" "Linen luggage takes smart travel world by storm." Etc., etc.

Which all leads people to think linen luggage must be prohibitive in price. A five-minute stop-over in a downtown store will convince them differently. They'll come away with their idea of its smartness confirmed, but they'll be amazed how little it costs. There are large and small suit cases, deep square hat boxes, overnight bags, and all the varied species of modern luggage.

Brief Hose.

Hose have always provided scant material for fashion writers—until now. They went from plain to fancy, from close weave to mesh, and off on a tangent with fancy clocks. As a general thing, though, hose stay close to conservative. Even the present departure is that.

From the toe to the knee they're like any other hose. But they stop short there. They go no further. The top, which reaches just to, or a little below, the knee is finished with an enclosed elastic garter.

Such hose are especially recommended for long evening and cocktail frocks, and even mid-length street dresses. For summer they're ideally cool. Heat which thrives so readily back of the knees, and frequently results in irritation there, will in no wise worry the woman who wears these "Lo-hos," as they're called.

Fragant and Efficacious.

A deodorant with the fragrance of pine needs only to be tried to be liked. It comes in a large bottle with a stemmed cork. A little sponge on the end of the stem holds the proper amount for one application, and does away with the extravagant waste attendant on cotton dabs.

After it has been applied, it may be washed off as soon as dried. It does its work so thoroughly it not only checks all odors, but perspiration, too.

Fastidious men will enjoy this antiodor liquid because of its prompt and thorough action and its faint refreshing pine scent.

Hors d'Oeuvres

The wise hostess isn't likely to mix her guests and cocktails without casting anchor with some tempting hors d'oeuvres. She knows very well, or she should, it's going to take a tempting delicacy to wean her guests' attention from their cups. So, if she's really in earnest she'll strike away from cheese, and anchovies for once, and serve something as solid as sausages.

She can buy them canned, four dozen in a can, the most savory, savory little viands imaginable. Baby franks, too, doctored up to tempt a reluctant appetite, sell in the same manner for the same price. Either of these served on freshly buttered toast will rival the cocktails in popularity.

Kitchen Door of Japan Opens Wide, Discloses Culinary Artists at Work

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY Japanese artist Utamaro called his famous wood block, reproduced above, "A Busy Day in the Kitchen." And it gives a charming picture of the Japanese housewife preparing those distinctly novel and delicious Japanese foods described in the accompanying article. Cooking, as you see, is done on the floor—which scarcely coincides with the Occidental woman's idea of kitchen efficiency.

Waiter Demurs, However Writer Eats Native Food, Likes It.

No matter how bizarre, no matter how alien to our own a dish may be, there is charm in the making of it, and often pleasant surprises to be found in the eating of it.

Today Japan invites you into her kitchen. It is a strange place, full of odd flavors and doors, yet one can not but feel that here artists of a nation are at work.

By Susan Mills.

FROM the land of flowers, sunshine, butterfly sashes and feathery prints we receive new and wonderful flavors in food. Tucked away in the second stories of some of New York's buildings are many Japanese Suki-Yaki "parlors." Shall we have dinner in one of them?

We climb the stairs and are cordially greeted by the proprietor. He is gracious with the habitual hospitality of his race. We find a table and study the bill of fare. It is a long strip, printed in English and Japanese characters. We may take it with us at the close of the meal as a souvenir.

Fish predominates. Fish soups, broiled fish, pickled fish, fish salad. We order a fish soup, ushio.

We ask the waiter, "How about fish suki-yaki?"

He looks worried. "Americans do not like."

"Why not?"

He explains carefully that Japanese like their fish, yes; but experience has taught them Americans do not like it prepared in the native way.

"No, no, no. Order again, please."

There are many varieties of suki-yaki, the national dish, so we decide on pork or beef. Very good. Why not order an entire native dinner?

It is a tense moment when the order is delivered. The native dinner consists of ten or twelve small dishes, most of which are unsympathetic to Occidentals. One is raw fish. It is a not uncommon delicacy with fish-eating people. The Japanese eat the fish raw and the Hawaiians not only eat them raw but still wriggling.

Fish Is Japanese Standby; It's Considered Delicacy Raw.

Now for the suki-yaki. The waiter brings all the ingredients in separate dishes and prepares it on the table before us. If it were to be served true Japanese style it would be cooked on a little gas burner on the floor. That, however, is another phase Americans do not like.

A heavy steel skillet is placed over the burner. Into it the waiter puts some vegetable oil, then some meat cut in small pieces. These fry briskly a moment, then he adds a little chicken broth and the other ingredients a little at a time. We see spring onions, bamboo shoots, bean sprouts, mushrooms, and others. We see inch cubes of brown pudding.

"What's that?"

"It is soy bean custard."

"And the thin translucent strips, what are they?"

"Potato jelly."

After all the vegetables have been added another cup of chicken broth is poured into the mixture, some soy sauce and some swiss chard leaves. The whole is well stirred with chopsticks, a lid clapped on and the dish is allowed to steam a few minutes.

We have nearly finished our helping of soup now, and while waiting for the suki-yaki to cook we taste the Japanese rice wine, sake. It has a delicate floral odor, as though made of molten flowers. We sip it from a tiny pale blue porcelain cup.

Now the suki-yaki is done and is heaped high on our plates. A steaming mountain of rice is served from a red lacquer bowl. The dish is delicious, a subtle blend of the many ingredients that is truly delightful.

Shall we try the chopsticks? There are two in a sealed wrapper beside our plates.

We find the Japanese food, while it resembles the Chinese in some respects, is individualistic and original. We recognize Japanese cooks as culinary artists and skilled craftsmen.

After our dessert, rice and almond cakes and tea, we thank our host and leave. He bows us to the door, in true Oriental fashion.

A nice adventure!

Owing to a change in schedule the article on German cooking will be postponed until next week. Watch for it on this page next Thursday.

For Business Wear or Sports, Those Ubiquitous Linen Suits

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, June 14—Why do business men in the tropics wear linen suits? (And every summer sees more of them in the temperate zone, too.) The answer is obvious. Because, when they must be out and about under the blazing sun, these men have found linen the neatest, most comfortable thing they can wear.

It's for exactly the same reason that so many women invest in linen suits. And now that linens are being made "uncrushable," they are even neater.

This year more women are wearing linen suits, because new styles have been designed which are softer and more casual and which fit into the plans of the suburban or country dweller and the sportswoman.

For the sportswoman there is a suit with an English type jacket with pleated back and one with a Norfolk jacket, also with pleated back and with the distinguishing Norfolk yoke and belt.

This is the type suit shown in the illustration and it really is tailored enough for business wear, too.

For softer, less mannish suits, you have two types. One is the suit with boxy jacket of about wrist length, usually cut to fasten high at the neckline and hang open below.

The other is the one with swagger jacket at fingertip or knee length. This is a particularly practical suit as the jacket is long enough to be worn as a separate coat with dresses.

This year you need not stick to the classic, plain linen suiting, though it is smart, especially for the very tailored, more mannish type. Natural and white are the most-in-fashion colors for it but it may also be had in brown, black and some lighter colors.

Newer are the peasant linen types. In these you find uneven nubby surfaces, tweedy mixtures, coarse burlap weaves, plaids, checks and stripes. Most of these run to natural shades, some of which have a quite deep ecru cast.

(Copyright, 1934.)

Linen suits of the type described are available in Washington in all the better shops and department stores.

Juvenile Court Progress Seen As Unsuccessful

Last Resort Against Delinquency, Says Children's Bureau Chief.

THE juvenile court is the last resort rather than the first line of defense against juvenile delinquency, according to Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

In a commencement address Tuesday at Wilson College at Chambersburg, Pa., Miss Abbott said many people were asking whether the juvenile court was performing or could be expected to perform services hoped for when it was first established.

"Americans generally feel ashamed of the progress, or lack of progress, made in the prevention of crime," she asserted. "There is widespread conviction that crime has its roots in childhood and to make significant progress in prevention we must get at the childhood causes of crime. Can the juvenile court perform this function?"

"Each year parents and teachers have sent to the judge children whom they had been unable to train to avoid antisocial conduct," she said. "If we consider what are traditionally the functions of the court for which legal education and experience prepare, we may well wonder why we ever thought the prevention of delinquency could be regarded so exclusively as the function of the court.

"We are now finding that for a very considerable number of children the causes of delinquency lie very deep in their past life and experience," she continued. "For many, poverty, insecurity, wretched, unsanitary homes, lack of opportunity for wholesale recreation, schools which were not able to provide or did not appreciate the value of individualized education, cruel lack of appreciation of child psychology by both parents and teachers, and neglect of health were in whole or in part the explanation.

Aim of Program.

"It is because we recognize these things can not be cured by six months on probation or a year at a boys' industrial school we are saying that the problem of wages, of security of employment, of decent housing, as well as educational, health and recreational services are a part of the program aimed at reducing delinquency by increasing the number of happy, well-adjusted and self-reliant young people.

"With a scientific viewpoint about conduct problems and their prevention we can hope to develop community agencies and resources that will start children on the road to a well-adjusted life. This will require some fundamental changes. We shall have to substitute for economic uncertainty and even despair the security which is the basis of happy family life. We shall have to develop ways of making available to all children the medical supervision which will make for optimum physical development. Schools will have to be much more resourceful in discovering new types of training for boys and girls who are restless, unhappy, and failing in school today.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Too Much Bromides.

The number of persons who suffer from too much bromides is by no means trivial. Everybody knows about bromides, and there is no limitation on the sale in drug stores

A great deal of this drug is used in the treatment of epilepsy, but the rule is that patients with this disease take doses set by some physician for that case, and most of them keep the dose down tolerably well.

Dr. M. Levin says those who suffer from mental disturbances caused by too much bromides fall into three groups. Those who are stuperous and mentally heavy and dull, those who have delirium of more ordinary types and those who have delirium in which they see animals on the walls—hallucinations.

People vary considerably in the amount of bromides they can stand. Among other differences in individuals is the amount of table salt they use. As a rule, persons who eat an exces of salt in their food stand bromides well, and vice versa. One of our customs that does a lot of harm is the excessive use of salt. There are a few conditions in which this custom serves to help, and thereby to make up for the harm it does in increasing the tolerance for bromides. In certain stages of the treatment of too much bromides, ordinary table salt is the best remedy we have.

What Today Means

"Gemini."

If June 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 8:30 to 10:30 p m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 5:30 to 7:30 p. m.

The business hours on this date will probably be mostly taken up with the planning of sales campaigns, the originating of new ideas, and closing up deals that have been pending for sometime.

If a woman and June 14 is your birthday, while of a very artistic temperament, you might find it advisable, from a financial standpoint, to confine your efforts to a commercial line of endeavor.

The child born on June 14, when it reaches its teens, will evince the proper amount of interest in its school work, and a sincere desire to accomplish what is desired of it.

The man born on June 14 is aggressive, and as a rule, very successful in whatever he undertakes. If born on this date, you should stick to legitimate business enterprises, as anything of a gambling nature may prove disastrous. Art, in some form, has a great attraction for you, but unless you have a very definite assurance you can make a living by following it, it might be best to confine your endeavors to a line of business you know.

SLANDER

By Arthur Somers Roche

Martha Blaisdell, New York society girl, has let her attorney advance her money on her securities and then hears that he said he was supporting her. She orders him to sell them all and take what he owes her. Out dancing with Herbert Cranston, explorer, she is confronted by her attorney, Gerald Gerrish, who attempts a drunken explanation. Cranston forces Gerrish to leave.

NEVERTHELESS, after two dances Martha pleaded fatigue to Cranston.

"I hate to drag you off when you're having a good time. At least, I hope you are," she added, smiling.

"Never had a better," he said.

"I can easily go home alone, and you might join the Towlers' party," she suggested.

"When you leave this place, the evening is ended," he said. "Of course, I'll take you home. Don't be absurd."

"I'll not," she said meekly.

And then, at his quick look of suspicion at her humility, they both laughed, and the evening, what remained of it was restored to its early level of gayety. He took her home, and they chatted of inconsequentials all the way.

Going Out of Town.

"Going to Bar Harbor tomorrow," he said. "Duty. Sister and her kids. Not that it isn't fun seeing them, but—I'd rather be seeing you. I'll be back Friday. Do you know where you're week-ending?"

"I'm going back to Trudie's," she said.

"Couldn't be sweller," he said. "Trudie has given me a blank check on her house for the rest of the summer, and whether she means it or not I'm going to draw upon her hospitality. I'll phone her in the morning. Have to, anway. Asked me to the Follies Thursday night. Told her I had something half on for the middle of the week. Was going down to Southampton, but I found a message from my sister tonight, giving me the dickens for having postponed my trip so long—are you deeply interested, my dear Miss Blaisdell, in these domestic details?"

Another Date Made.

"Fascinated," she said.

"I'm relieved," he said. "So, then, I'll see you the end of the week. That is," he went on quickly, "if you don't mind my making plans to be where you are?"

She hid a smile at the quick alarm in his voice.

"I don't think I mind very much," she said.

And with that they parted. And once in her room Martha gave way to tears of rage. But she conquered them quickly. This was the second time today she had wept. She would not do it again. And if Gerrish was offensive a second time—but she refused to contemplate this. She brought common sense to bear upon the situation. A worm can't harm one. Save in public places, Gerrish would never encounter her again; and in public places there would always be a Cranston to protect her.

Cranston Was Disturbed.

Cranston found peace of mind as difficult to achieve as did Martha. The man Gerrish was a drunken lout, whose nastiness should linger in no one's memory.

Hang it, Martha Blaisdell was a nice girl. In addition to enormous charm and great beauty and a pretty wit, she was nice. And only a rotter would permit to linger in his memory unnice suspicions about Martha Blaisdell. And he hoped he wasn't a rotter. Therefore he would forget the whole business.

But thoughts are not as easily dismissed as that. Condemn himself as he would, the mean thoughts persisted. They were vaguely in the back of his mind when he dropped in the next day at the Lido Club for luncheon.

Hailed by Friend.

Brink Towler, consuming a cocktail, hailed him. "Lunching? Good. With me, eh?

"Fine," said Cranston. He refused a proffered cocktail. "Too early in the day for me, Brink," he said.

They took a table by a window. Outside the asphalt was soft in the torrid August sun.

"Gosh, how I'd like a swim," sighed Towler. "Can't understand why you stay in town these days, Herbie. Unless you're getting up an expedition or something."

"Not a thing in the world. I'm entitled to a few months' vacation, and I'm taking them. As a matter of fact, though, I don't know why I hang around New York. I guess it's because I want to see people, lots of them. Then, too, I run off every week-end—going down to Bar Harbor this afternoon."

Sister Was Friend.

"Sister Letty? Kiss her for me," said Brink. "Grand girl. Gosh, how close I was to being your brother-in-law."

"So? Never heard that one," said Cranston, grinning. "Letty never told me."

"Letty never knew," chuckled Brink. "Had the darndest crush on her, and too scared to tell her, and she ups and marries Sim Torrance and there we are."

"And you call that being close to being my brother-in-law? I'm going to tell Mrs. Brink on you," threatened Cranston.

Towler's good-humored countenance wrinkled in mirth.

"Mrs. Brink knows. But don't tell Letty. She'd razz me to death, the little devil."

Cranston smiled. Letty was a little devil, but the most charming one he knew.

"I'll keep your dark secret," he said.

Gossip Spreading.

"Oke," said Towler. "Say, did you slug that rat Gerrish last night or just shove him out?"

"The doorman took care of him, I guess," said Cranston shortly.

"I wish you'd belted him one for the general good of the community," said Towler. "Filthy beggar. Getting a girl like Martha Blaisdell talked about."

"Is she?" asked Cranston evenly.

"Oh come, now, don't be Galahad," said Brink. "You've been around in your day, you know. You know when the boys and girls are chatting and when they aren't.

"You aren't that dumb, Herbie. Why, that one's been all over town for weeks. What did he say last night, anyway?"

Cranston paled slightly.

"He was drunk. He said to me that Miss Blaisdell accused him of telling people that—that he kept her. And I rushed him out. Do you really mean to tell me that this man Gerrish has actually told that sort of tale about Miss Blaisdell?"

"Well, from what you say, Martha seemed to think he has," replied Towler.

"Has he?" demanded Cranston.

Towler shrugged.

"He hasn't told me. I'd belt him over if he did. It isn't what a man says, Herbie. You know that. It's what he insinuates, what he looks, what he grins. He's handled Martha's affairs since her folks died. I guess she liked him in a way; didn't mind him anyway. An extra beau is always useful. So she sort of dragged Gerrish into various places. People didn't mind. He wasn't openly objectionable, and if Martha could use him—well, Martha does what she likes, you know. After all, she's Martha Blaisdell and we all bow down to her. A swell girl.

Idea Prevailed.

"Well a lot of people got the impression that—I don't know how Gerrish put it over, but he did. You know, something crystallizes all of a sudden. One day a thing isn't really definitely in people's minds, and the next day they're talking of nothing else.

"Now a lot of people happen to know how much money Martha's parents left her. They know that the securites in which it was left have dwindled to almost nothing. Yet she lives at the same rate, and ——"

"Do you—for God's sake, Brink, you aren't telling me that you believe——"

"Certainly not," said Towler quickly. "But I know people that do believe it. Even as swell a girl as Martha Blaisdell can leave herself open to false interpretation. And when you add to that the hints of a swine like Gerrish—well, you can add it up, can't you?"

"He ought to be shot," said Cranston softly.

"He isn't worth the chair," said Towler.

"I suppose not," sighed Cranston. looked at the telephone book. Ten minutes later he was in the outer room of Gerald Gerrish's brokerage offices on Forty-second street. He gave his name to a boy and in a moment was admitted to Gerrish's presence.

To be continued tomorrow.

Culbertson on Bridge

1075.

Reaching the Best Contract.

Crockford's Club, New York, has been conducting an unusual Bridge event—an individual Masters' Tournament. Twenty-eight of the recognized ranking players of the Metropolis have been participating, and as far as the entry list is concerned, it would compare favorably so far as skill goes with that of any so-called National tournament, with the possible exception of the recent Grand Nationals of the United States Bridge Association.

On many hands practically identical results were secured, while on others, the experts gave full play to their individual idiosyncrasies both in the bidding and in the play.

This is an interesting hand from one session:

West, Dealer
North and South vulnerable

	♠ A 5 ♡ 8 6 5 4 ◇ A 6 5 3 ♣ K 9 3
♠ 9 8 6 2 ♡ A K J 3 ◇ K Q J ♣ 10 4		♠ K Q J 3 ♡ Q 10 7 2 ◇ 2 ♣ Q 8 7 4
	♠ 10 7 4 ♡ 9 ◇ 9 8 7 ♣ A J 10 6 5 2

At one table where the best result in bidding was achieved, the East player was Mr. Howard Schenken, the South player Mr. Sydney Rusinow, the West player Mr. Hugh Jackson and the North player, myself. Here the bidding went as follows:

West	North	East	South
1◇	Pass	1♠	Pass
2♡	Pass	3♡	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♡	Pass
5◇	Pass	5♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

In my judgment, in a game scored on the match point basis, this bidding leaves nothing to be desired. Of course, West, if possible, is anxious to play the hand in the suit in which he holds honors—namely, diamonds — and when he finds that he has a fit with his partner's spade suit and his partner can support his hearts, he is justified in making the mild Slam try of five diamonds after his partner has raised his hearts to four. The contract of five hearts is makable against any defense, as, even with a club Opening, the four hearts in Dummy stand as a barrier against any successful assault on the hand, whereas if the five diamond contract were undertaken the immediate assault upon the trump suit through a club lead must bring about the defeat of the contract.

Played at spades by East, the lead of the singleton heart defeated a contract of four, as North; with his trump entry and diamond Ace, was able to give his partner two ruffs.

At one table West, misled by what seemed a splendid fit, carried the bidding to six spades, which was doubled by North and defeated two tricks.

"Rhapsody in Blah" To Open June 28

Mary Benson Paints Backdrop for Scenes.

ONE OF the scenes of the new play, "Rhapsody in Blah," by Frank Baer, which the Pierce Hall Players will present June 28 and 29, in Pierce Hall, takes place in a Representative's office in the House Office Building in Washington. Miss Mary Foley Benson, one of the few women scientific illustrators in the Department of Agriculture, is meeting this requirement by painting a backdrop showing the dome of the Capitol as seen through a window.

Allen Stephens, technical director, assisted by Warren Walton, formerly on the production staff for the George Washington University Troubador shows, is constructing the setting for the office, as well as for the drawing room in the home of a Representative.

Included in the cast of the play, staged by the author, are Virginia True, Dorine Calcote, Yerby Pannill, Ruth Snodgrass, Lyell MacLean, Clare Sargent, Jesse Veitch, Paul Alexander, Kent Dyer, Charles Bell, Clarence Ruebsam, Harry Barnhart, James Kelley, William Austin Davis, Edmund Evans, Charles C. Gillman and John Kendrick.

The Unknown.

I know not what a day may bring, and little do I care; tomorrow I may dance and sing, or wail and rend my hair. Today is good enough for me, and it is right side up, and I am full of mirth and glee, I gambol with my pup. Today the sky is bright and blue, the sun is on the job, and vain foreboding I eschew, I have no time to sob. Today the little birdlets sing their "Annie Rooney" songs, and I am happy as a king, forgetting griefs and wrongs. Today I have no pains or aches, I show a smiling front, and I could whip my weight in snakes, if asked to pull that stunt. Today I find I have the price, my credit's good as wheat, and such a knowledge should suffice to make my life a treat. And so I'm happy as a queen, I chortle and I smile, while romping on the village green with my tame crocodile. So many hail tomorrow's grief before it comes along; they look for trouble and they beef and have no use for song. Although today's as fine as silk, they mutter through their hats, "Tomorrow we'll be short of milk to feed our Maltese cats. Today we have a cloudless sky, tomorrow, though," they say, "will see the milk-cows all go dry, the hens will cease to lay."

Carnera 6-5 Favorite on Bout Eve

Serious Baer Travels to New York to Await Battle.

Champion Staying at Camp for Night; Interest High.

right-hand of the slugger Baer, which, if it explodes on the countenance of Carnera, is calculated to restore to the United States the title that only two foreigners have held since the immortal John L. was knocking rivals loose from their equilibrium.

On the sidewalks of New York in the hotels of the sporting fraternity, over Gotham's gargantuan bars, the betting odds finally hit a consistent level after rapid fluctuations that stamped all quotations as synthetic in the absence of heavy wagering. But tonight, Carnera ruled a 6-to-5 favorite to come out of the ring with his title intact with only a late flood of Baer money at ringside likely to reduce the betting to even money.

Max Baer was a very serious young man as he headed for New York in the evening from his training camp in Asbury Park, N. J.

Carnera was still suffering from a sore throat, exercised lightly at his Pompton Lakes (N. J.) camp and stayed there for the night. He plans to drive in tomorrow morning for the weighing in ceremonies at the New York State Athletic Commission offices at 12 noon.

When champion and challenger make their way from the outlands to the Garden offices tomorrow at 2 o'clock for the official weighing-in ceremonies that will permit the New York Boxing Commission to get its picture in the paper for the last time preceding the fight, Ponderous Primo is expected to balance the scales at his lowest fighting weight since he won the title from Jack Sharkey—261 pounds, which will give him approximately a 45-pound advantage over the Adonis-like physique of Baer.

Baer Backers Recover.

Baer supporters today appeared to be fully recovered from the scare conjured by Boxing Commissioner Brown, who last week branded Bad Boy Maxie as unfit physically for a title battle as a result of lax training methods. Recent workouts have seen Baer prove his own case to the satisfaction of the majority of the commission and Baer backers have been pointing out with mixed pride and hope that Maxie was never the fighter to show off in workouts.

But the unknown quantities of the bout, already heavily supplied by the mastodonic Carnera, whose dazzling swathe through rows of set-ups finally landed him at the top of the heap with no accurate line as yet on his true fistic prowess, have been heightened manifoldly by the erratic background of the man he is fighting tomorrow.

Fully as much as Carnera, is Baer a question mark of the prize ring. Winner by one punch over Max Schmeling, Baer's record is studded with defeats by those who were little more than the riff-raff of the ring.

Baer flouted every precept of orthodox preparation for a title battle, mixing his boxing with radio, night club life, the movies, insulting telegrams to the champion and every other conceivable distraction.

But the potency of that sleep-laden right hand which, when properly applied to the chin of the opposition, has demonstrated that it can separate mind from body, has stamped Baer the undisputed favorite if tomorrow's bout is to end in a knockout.

Despite the odds favoring Carnera on the Rialto Baer was the people's choice when a knockout was discussed. In contrast to the odds of 1-to-3 that Carnera would retain his title by a knockout, possibilities of a knockout victory by Baer were commanding odds of only 2 to 1, reflecting the respect for Maxie's punching power and the doubts of Primo's ability to take it.

Giants Trounce Reds, 6-4, by Bunching Hits

Cincinnati, June 13 (AP).—Bunching hits in the third and seventh innings, the New York Giants today defeated the Cincinnati Reds, 6 to 4. The Giants called on Carl Hubbell to hold their two-run lead and he pitched the last three innings, after Clydel Castleman and Joe Bowman were taken out.

Cincinnati wasted a number of hits as the Reds made as many as the Eastern invaders, but failed to get them in the quantities Bill Terry's charges did.

The Giants scored all of their runs in the third and seventh frames, tallying twice in the third and four times in the seventh, in which a walk, two doubles, two singles and a wild pitch cinched the game for them.

10th Victory Registered By Gomez

Yanks Defeat Browns, 6-2, as Southpaw Coasts to Win.

Gehrig Hits His 16th Home Run to Give New York Lead.

NEW YORK, June 13 (AP).—Limiting the St. Louis Browns to six hits, Vernon (Lefty) Gomez today pitched the New York Yankees to a 6-to-2 triumph over Roger Hornsby's team and his tenth victory of the season.

By giving the Yankees victory in the first game of their home stand against Western clubs, Gomez became the first major league pitcher to win ten games in the 1934 campaign. The southpaw moundsman's record is marred thus far by only one defeat.

Lou Gehrig put the Yankees in the lead with his sixteenth home run of the season with Babe Ruth on base in the opening inning, and Manager Joe McCarthy's men were never headed after that. Gehrig also made a triple and a single, Ben Chapman scoring him with a single after "Columbia Lou" had tripled in the fourth frame.

Chapman also accounted for another run, driving home Sam Byrd, who had replaced Ruth in right field, with a single in the seventh.

Oscar Melillo drove in the first Brown run with a double, while West's infield out, which followed an error by Crosetti on Hemsley's grounder, scored the Browns' catcher with the only other St. Louis run.

Irving Hadley was in the box the first six innings for St. Louis, giving way when Manager Hornsby went in to pinch hit for him during a Brown rally. Bill McAfee finished for the visitors.

Pirates Pound Ball To Rout Dodgers, 15-2

Pittsburgh, June 13 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates turned the tables on the Brooklyn Dodgers today to win the second game of the series, 15 to 2. The Pirates collected 17 hits, including triples and doubles, to make the contest a one-sided affair.

Bill Swift was nicked for a two-run triple by Sam Leslie in the first inning after two were out, but the Pirate right-hander settled down after that and proceeded to reel off eight runless innings.

Herring started on the slab for the Dodgers and was relieved by Munns in the second inning. The Pirates combined some lucky hits with several of the genuine variety to make the inning worth seven runs. Beck went to the aid of Munns in the sixth and finished out the game.

I Pick Carnera —By Pierotti

WHILE PRIMO HAS HAD TWO HARD FIGHTS UNDER HIS BELT, MAXIE HAS BEEN HITTING THE STAR DUST TRAIL, AND NOTHING RUINS A FIGHTER'S TIMING THAN A LONG LAYOFF. TAKE McLARNIN FOR INSTANCE.....

BAER WILL FIND CARNERA'S ENORMOUS WEIGHT A DISTINCT HANDICAP. WHEN THE LEANING TOWER OF PISA DRAPES HIMSELF OVER MAXIE FOR A FEW ROUNDS, BAER WILL THINK THAT HE IS THE COILS OF A PYTHON...

Primo Carnera,

THE BIG FELLOW'S SPEED AND EFFECTIVE LEFT HAND WILL MORE THAN OVER BALANCE THE EDGE IN HITTING POWER THAT THEY CONCEDE TO BAER.....

A BORING-IN TYPE OF FIGHTER LIKE MAXIE WOULD BE IDEAL FOR CARNERA'S SUNDAY PUNCH, HIS RIGHT UPPERCUT, WHICH HE BRINGS UP WITH ALL HIS 260 POUNDS BEHIND IT. I LOOK FOR CARNERA TO WIN BY A KNOCKOUT IF HE CONNECTS WITH THAT UPPERCUT.....

Dunora, Odds-on Choice, Gallops to Victory in Feature Race at Charles Town

Filly Defeats Her Field by 5 Lengths

Flageolet, 18-1 Shot, Is Second in Sprint; Hurry Bye Third.

By Walter Haight,
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHARLES TOWN, June 13. Dunlin is becoming the leading sire of winners at this mountain race track. He is munching grass on a breeding farm and probably doesn't give a hang if any of his sons or daughters win races. However, the fact remains that, the Dunlin horses have been greeting the judges first with considerable regularity of late. Today, Dunlin had offsprings of each sex turn in a winning effort.

In the feature race, Dunora scampered to the wire five lenghts ahead of the nearest opposition and in the fourth race Dunstar did his sister one better by scoring a 12-lenght victory over an assortment of cattle. In the first race a distant cousin of the Dunlins, one Scotty Don, was the winner.

The fashionable rider Weir had the mount on Dunora and the pair lost little time in getting to the front on the six and one-half furlong jaunt. Hurry Bye made an effort to keep up but soon faded out of the picture. Then it was that Flageolet became the chief chaser. He made a game effort of it but could not cut down the long section of sunlight between the pair.

Scotty Don, teamed with Schley B., provided the $23.80 mutuel that marked the daily double.

Three favorites, two second choices and two longshots were recorded on the program. The lengthy mutuels were on King Bird at $25.60 in the sixth and Royal Lassie at $13.60 in the finale.

KING BIRD, rated far back from the fast early pace, began to pick up his field when leaving the back stretch, moved up quickly, came between the leaders in the stretch, and closed stoutly under good handling. PINK POST raced within reach of the leaders in the early stages, secured racing room on the rail entering the stretch, closed strongly, but could not withstand the rush of the winner. CAPTOR had good early speed to set the pace, raced MAZYNIATA into submission, but faltered from his efforts. ROYAL CHARGE, reserved from the early pace, saved ground on the inside, and closed well. FOREST FAUN, taken far out of the running, closed well. HELENS ALIBI lacked speed while racing on the outside. SERENABIT had early speed, but stopped badly. BYE AND BYE broke, but immediately dropped out, and was pulled up.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

First race—Justa Sunbeam appears to have the edge on those scheduled to compete in the opener. Breaks from a good post and may never be caught. Nay Nay still figures high in the Bennings books. Crossing Over to take care of the others.

Second race—Pukka Heaven can run for my dough in this. That last was a beaut and he figures to repeat the effort. Liberty Ace seems to have an excellent chance of being in the money. Zombro might awake for Clocker Mike and Jobs Dido is dangerous. The latter seems to be looking for another good mutuel.

Third race—Wise Pete ran well over at Hagerstown and goes on the top of the group. Vitella and Disruption are fair ones. Both have fighting chances.

Fourth race—Grace Bunting and Mordrom will battle it out for the major portion of this purse. Both are as fit as those recent wins indicate. The top filly has the edge in my book. Doc Conner, another recent winner, may surprise.

Fifth race—Washout continues to stagger home ahead of good fields. She meets the best the track has to offer tomorrow in Silverdale and Vacillate, but she will do, as far as I'm concerned.

Sixth race—McDonald H seems to have found his racing legs and anything listed here that beats him will know he or she has been in a hoss contest. Changeable will have plenty of support in the mutuels. Dark Star for the show.

Seventh race—Huskoday has been in races and races since arriving here, but if he doesn't take this he can keep running right up and jump off the side of the mountain. Merry Miss and Tancred for the other money awards.

Stock Market Is Unchanged; At 81.0 Level

Declines Set in After Early Advances; Trading Falls to 882,015 Shares.

New York, June 13 (AP).—After pushing ahead quietly in the forenoon, the stock market repeated with wheat today.

A decline of more than 4 cents a bushel in wheat from the day's best levels touched off selling in J. I. Case, Montgomery Ward and other stocks which usually move with the grain market and discouraged buying in other sections of the list.

The setback was limited, however. Final prices were mixed, but some sizable gains were retained to the close. The Standard Statistics Co. average price of 90 stocks remained unchanged at 81.

Speculators found commodities more alluring than stocks. Some large operators were reported to have switched into commodities, believing that an upward trend in commodity prices and freedom from Federal regulation would give them wider scope for action there.

Trading in stocks dwindled as the market eased off in the afternoon. Sales on the Stock Exchange totaled 882,015 shares compared with 947,080 in the preceding session.

Under the smooth surface of security markets investment demand was apparent in the firmness of best grade bonds and preferred stocks. In common stocks American Telephone, Santa Fe, National Biscuit, National Lead and Du Pont scored net gains of fractions to more than 2 points.

Steel shares held steady, finishing about unchanged. Sugar stocks perked up on strength of the raw product. American Sugar touched a new 1934 peak above 61, ending a point higher. American Beet Sugar preferred, Great Western Sugar, South Puerto Rico and Cuban American picked up gains of fractions to more than a point.

Metal shares ran into profit taking after making further gains. Kennecott sold at a new peak for the year fractionally above 23. A number of preferred stocks scored gains ranging as high as 5 points, as demand for investment outlet spilled over from the bond market.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Effects of Silver Bill Will Be the Same, by and Large, as Would Be the Wasting of the Same Amount in Any Other Way.

By Ralph West Robey.

Passage by the Senate of the silver bill marks the end, for all practical purpose, of the long controversy on the desirability of "doing something for silver." More accurately it marks the beginning of a respite from the incessent propaganda that if silver were reintroduced into our monetary system in large quantity the West would become prosperous, our trade with the Orient would boom, the laboring classes would have a more plentiful supply of money, control of our finances would be wrested from the hands of the "international bankers," and we would be prepared to combat the devastating competition of foreign nations. Ultimately, of course, the silver crowd will be back asking for more—regardless of how fully the powers of the present bill are used—for as a group they never will be satisfied.

At the moment, however, there is no particular point in anticipating future arguments of the silver lobby. The important thing now is to appraise the probable effect of the bill. In attempting to do this it must be borne in mind that the act is not mendatory. In consequence the President might refuse to buy a single ounce of silver. No one believes, however, that the Administration will take such an attitude. It is only a question of how much silver will be bought.

Bill Provides Possible Ratio of One to Three.

Under the terms of the act enough may be purchased to raise the proportion of silver to gold in our monetary system to one to three. No purchases can be made at a price in excess of the "monetary value" of the metal. At present, by definition in the bill, such "monetary value" is $1.29 an ounce. Were the President to reduce the silver content of the silver dollar by the same proportion that he has devalued the gold dollar, which he has authority to do under the gold reserve act of 1934 (the devaluation act of last January), the "monetary value" of silver wouldl be $2.18 an ounce.

For simplicity, however, let us assume that the silver dollar is not devalued and consequently that the maximum price at which the metal may be bought, and at which it may be carried on the books of the Government, is $1.29 an ounce. Under this condition it would require the purchase of $1,700,000,000 worth of silver to get the one to three ratio. How much this would cost, obviously, would depend upon the market price for the metal. The significance of the figure, $1,700,000,000, therefore, is merely that this is the maximum amount that may be spent by the Government for the purchase of silver.

Will Not Cause Marked Effects Upon Business.

If the Government spends this much it will have, of course, certain effects upon our economic system—the same effects by and large that the wasting of a like amount in any other way would have. These effects will be a tendency for higher prices and increased business activity. Such an amount, however, even though it all is spent in the next few months, which is unlikely, is too small to cause a sudden spurt of prices or a great burst of business activity. This will be clear if it is recalled that in the last few months we have spent a billion dollars through the CWA and the FERA alone, without materially affecting either prices or the total volume of business activity.

One may say, further, that this bill will not result in a boom in our trade with the Orient; that it will not cause the West suddenly to become prosperous; that it will have no effect upon the control of finance by "international bankers;" that it will not put a penny additional in the pockets of the ordinary working man, and that it will not enable us to compete more effectively in world markets.

What it will do, and this, of course, is the purpose of the legislation, is, first, line the pockets of silver producers and silver speculators, and, secondly, enhance the political chances of some of the members of Congress from the silver-producing States.

Bonds Climb One-Tenth as Federals Lead

Dealing Is Heaviest Since May 10; Trading Totals $15,253,000.

New York, June 13 (AP).—United States Treasury securities forged ahead today while corporation bonds turned moderately irregular and German dollar loans suffered another sharp relapse.

Due to relatively heavy trading in the Federals, total transfers amounted to $15,253,000, par value, against $13,946,000 yesterday. It was the largest day's volume since May 10 last.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues edged up one-tenth of a point to 86.6.

New Highs Established.

Nine Treasury loans established new highs for the year, with gains ranging from three-thirty-seconds to thirteen-thirty-seconds of a point. The turnover in this section aggregated about $4,900,000.

The most active single issue was the Home Owners Loan 4s, which, however, showed a loss of one-thirty-second. Home Loan 3s, on the other hand, advanced four-thirty-seconds. Early demand for the Home Loan 4s was said to have been for the account of a large bank which was attracted by the advantageous yield, notwithstanding the possibility that the issue may be called for redemption on January 1 next.

The Federal market was not particularly affected by the announcement that a banking syndicate will offer publicly next Monday $132,000,000 of Federal Land Bank 4 per cent bonds which will be underwritten by the Treasury.

Holders of some $160,000,000 4¾ per cent Land Bank bonds, which will be called for redemption on July 1, will be given preferential treatment, it was understood, in the allotments of subscriptions to the new 4s.

German Bond Offerings.

Heavy offerings of German bonds was a disturbing influence. Reports that the Reich's current financial crisis might result in a default of interest on the Young plan 5½s and Dawes 7s brought losses of 2⅜ and 3½ points, respectively, in these loans. Other German issues were off 1 to 3 or more and the Austrians developed heaviness.

In the domestic division improvement was shown by some loans of Alleghany Corporation, American Telephone, Armour & Co., Burlington, General American Investors, Interborough Rapid Transit, Lehigh Valley, Morris & Co., Northern Pacific, Pere Marquette, Southern Pacific and Tobacco Products.

Curb's Prices Change Little; Rises Small

Scattered Offerings Appear in Late Dealing; Sales, 152,000 Shares.

New York, June 13 (AP).—Leading curb shares showed slight improvement at the end of today's quiet session. A few scattered specialties finished with gains of a point or so. Utilities, metals and oils were narrow throughout.

During the second hour mild rallying tendencies prevailed, but the movement soon subsided, and scattered offerings appeared in the late dealings.

Safety Car Heating rose 3 points in a small transfer. Pittsburgh Plate Glass, after advancing nearly 2 points, yielded about half. Singer Manufacturing ended a point higher, while Bunker Hill & Sullivan showed a net appreciation of 1⅞.

Electric Bond & Share, Humble Oil and Wright Hargreaves were virtually unchanged on final quotations, while small advances were recorded by Swift International and American Gas & Electric, Hiram Walker and Tubize Chatillon closed easy.

Transfers, which approximated 152,000 shares, were a trifle under yesterday.

The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

The dollar was higher against most foreign currencies today, as weakness in the pound was carried over into other exchanges.

The dollar gained 1½ cents in London, closing at 5.04 to the pound, while sterling dipped 1¼ cents in New York to $5.04.

The price of gold in London rose sharply, advancing 6 pence to 138 shillings 1½ pence a fine ounce (equivalent to $34.89). Bars valued at about $1,641,650 were sold.

In Paris, also, the dollar was higher, moving up a centime to the equivalent of 6.60½ cents to the franc. The French unit declined .00½ cent in New York to 6.60½ cents.

Canadian dollars continued to show unusual strength, rising to a new high for the year in New York at a premium of 1 1-16 cents over par. The rise was attributed in Canadian banking circles largely to the City of Montreal's borrowing of $6,000,000 in London. It was believed the exchange would recede after the transaction was cleared up.

German marks declined one-tenth of a cent in New York to 38 cents.

Cotton Prices Rise 1 Point In Quiet Sales

July Closes at 12.13 as Market Holds Steady; Rain Reported.

New York, June 13 (AP).—After further gains in the early trading cotton eased under late realizing.

October contracts which had advanced to 12.45 and then eased to 12.32 closed at 12.36 with the general market finishing steady, net unchanged to 1 point advance.

In the forenoon prices rose 7 to 9 points on local and commission house buying owing to expectations that the weekly weather report would reflect unfavorable crop progress.

Fails to Rally.

The advance carried July to 12.20 and December to 12.56 or to new highs for the movement, but the market failed to rally further when the official weekly summary was issued.

It was said that the recent advance had evidently discounted retarded crop progress and a fair volume of profit taking developed. Reports of rains in western Oklahome and the Texas panhandle combined with the forecast for further showers there brought in some of the selling. July eased to 12.08 and December to 12.42 or to net losses of 4 to 6 points. Pressure was not active however and late covering accounted for rallies to the previous closing levels.

Favors Weevil Activity.

The weekly weather report said that rains had favored weevil activity in the Southeast and in portions of the East Gulf States, and private complaints of weevil infestation were received in the trade.

While the outlook for the eastern belt was for generally clear weather, showers predicted for south Georgia and Florida, combined with heavy rains in southern Florida, caused some to fear that the gulf tropical disturbance was recurring in the East.

Exports today, 34,160, making 7,099,259 so far this season. Port receipts, 4,470. U. S. port stocks, 2,702,285.

Cottonseed Oil

Bleachable cottonseed oil was firmer today on further covering and commission house buying, promoted by the sharp advance in lard and higher hog prices.

Prices at one time were 11 to 16 points net higher, but near the close there were reactions under liquidation influenced by the easiness of grains, with the market closing 2 to 8 points net advance. Sales were 93 contracts, including 28 in exchanges from July to September at 22 points, July to November at 40 points and 37 points and July to January at 50 points difference. Bleachable spot nominal; July closed, 5.35; September, 5.56; October, 5.68; December, 5.84; January, 5.88.

Trade Trends.

(Associated Press.)

Hides—The trade hears that packers have sold about 66,000 hides at a cent a pound advance over prices at which business was closed early in June. This brought native steers back to 10 cents a pound and native cows to 9½ cents.

Commodity prices—For the first time in a month advances in commodity prices this week outnumbered declines. As a result of a large preponderance of gains in foodstuff quotations according to Dun & Bradstreet, there were 33 gains against 16 declines.

Quicksilver—Trade interests report a further lowering of dealers' stocks as a result of fairly active consumer buying during the last several weeks. Sellers are asking $75 to $77 a flask for spot material.

Zinc—The price of ore at Joplin, Mo., is off another $1 for the past week at $25 to $26 a ton. Production of concentrates for the week was 7,569 tons or about 1,200 less than in the previous week.

Saturday Closing Voted.

New York, June 13 (AP).—The board of governors of the commodity exchange voted today to close the exchange on Saturdays from June 23 to September 1, inclusive.

Canada Trade Expected to Continue Rise

Outlook for Summer Is Still Promising; Industries Gain.

New York, June 13.—With the exception of the unfavorable outlook for crops in the prairie provinces of Canada nothing appears in prospect to retard the expansion of trade during the summer months.

All of the leading indices continue their upward climb, even though the percentages of gain over a year ago are beginning to be narrowed, because of the abrupt rise that was in evidence at that period.

Bank clearings still are topping the 1933 figures, industrial recovery is displayed by the increased freight movement and the larger earnings of the carriers, while the steady broadening of employment is adding constantly to the buying power of the public.

Retail Sales Up.

Even though retail distribution in May was retarded by the preponderance of cold and rainy days during the month, sales were substantially in excess of the 1933 figures. Since June 1, the increase in demand for merchandise has been vigorous and insistent, as there were so many postponed needs to be filled.

Aside from wearing apparel, both in the women's and men's divisions, hardware, camping equipment, electric refrigerators, furniture, radios and jewelry were particularly prominent in the purchase this week, while interest is being sustained in wash goods, hosiery, textiles and shoes, according to dispatches to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., from branch offices located in the chief commercial and industrial centers of the Dominion.

The further advance of operating schedules in the leading industries finds concrete evidence in the total number of employed, which now is at the highest level since November, 1931.

Industry Regains Losses.

Canada today has regained industrially nearly all of the ground lost since the early part of 1931, with the revival on a sound basis, because the major conditioning factors are natural and not artificial. Automobile manufacturers are operating at capacity, as dealers are booking the largest orders in several years.

Accessory plants are correspondingly busy. Steel fabricators have increased production, while farm implement and electrical manufacturers are operating on a higher scale. Die and tool manufacturers are receiving a steadily-improved volume of orders, with a revival of demand from steel fabricators who have not been in the market for a considerable time.

Rubber manufacturing plants are mostly working at capacity, and the same is true of the majority of furniture factories. Tanneries are fairly well employed, but the boot and shoe manufacturers report a falling off in orders.

Paper and Lumber.

Nearly all of the paper and lumber mills have stepped up their operating schedules. Manufacturers of men's and women's clothing have had a good season, and most of the dress manufacturers still are working full time.

Real and artificial silk mills are producing at or near capacity, while woolen and cotton mills continue to be well employed, with a good volume of orders ahead. It is the silk industry, in fact, which has been responsible for much of the increase in employment during the past year.

The gain in 1933 over 1930 was 44 per cent, while total pay rolls in 1933 amounted to more than $6,000,000. These figures do not include the pay roll or employment in the silk hosiery industry, where production increased from 1,100,000 dozen pairs in 1930 to 1,400,000 dozen pairs in 1933, a gain of almost 30 per cent, which is directly indicative of the expanded employment.

Reservations for Cruises.

The advance reservations already made for the popular cruises along the St. Lawrence route and over the Great Lakes give promise of one of the best summer seasons that steamship lines have had in four years.

Tourist traffic to the various inland lakes and camps is expected to be nearly double that of last summer, judging from the bookings which have been made to date.

More Canadians are taking a holiday this year, and an increased number of visitors is expected from the United States. In 1933, Canada's tourist trade showed a marked contraction, total expenditures by tourists from other countries being held to $117,124,000, compared with $212,118,000 in 1932 and $250,776,000 in 1931. The peak year was in 1929, when expenditures by tourists from other countries reached $390,379,000, in contrast to $83,734,000 back in 1920.

Baltimore Grain Prices.

Baltimore, June 13.—WHEAT—Shipments from elevators, 86,968 bushels. Stock in elevators, 303,381 bushels. Opening prices were: No. 2 red winter, garlicky, spot, domestic, 1.00¼; June delivery, domestic, 1.00¼. Receipts of wheat from nearby sections running light. There is a demand for No. 2 red winter, garlicky. Off grades, however, are hard to move at a wider discount.

CORN—Receipts, 13,829 bushels by car. Stock in elevators, 5,710 bushels. Receipts of corn from the nearby sections only occasional. For yellow and high-colored mixed there is a fair domestic demand. Cob corn quoted at 3.70 per barrel for carloads prime nearby yellow on spot. Offerings ample for present needs. Demand fair. No. 2 yellow corn arriving here by car quoted at 72@73 per bushel with transit billing.

OATS—Shipments from elevators, 310 bushels. Stock in elevators, 20,446 bushels. Supplies of oats here are slowly decreasing. Demand is fair in a jobbing way. Choice, extra heavy oats command a good premium over the average run and lighter weights. No. 2 white oats, 58@60 per bushel, as to weight and location.

Note—On all sales of oats to the local trade, excepting those on track, there is an addition charge of 1 cent per bushel for storage and elevation which is paid by the buyer.

RYE—Receipts, 25,223 bushels afloat. Stock in elevators, 246,145 bushels.

HAY—General hay market is quiet. Supply ample. On good timothy and clover mixed prices range from 12.00 to 14.00 per ton. The poorer grades of hay are hard to sell at any price. Market irregular on everything below 3 timothy.

STRAW—Market is quiet and steady. Wheat straw, No. 1, per ton, 9.50@10.00; oat straw, 9.50@10.50.

MILL FEED—Receipts, 85 tons, including 30 tons for shipment. Market firm on spot bran and middlings. Spring bran, per ton, 100-lb sacks, 29.00; standard middlings, per ton, 100-pound sacks, 29.50.

BARLEY—Stock in elevators, 995 bushels.

Kearney Says 4-5 Take Your Choice

St. Louis, June 13 (AP).—Odds of 4 to 5, take your choice, were quoted tonight by Tom Kearney, veteran St. Louis betting commissioner, on the Carnera-Baer heavyweight championship fight tomorrow night.

Although "money poured in from the East" yesterday after New York bookmakers temporarily suspended activities, Kearney said the "play" on the Carnera-Baer fight was the smallest for any major fight in many years.

"I got no play at all today," he said.

Until today Kearney quoted Carnera at 7 to 10 and Baer at even money.

You can join this expedition by becoming a part of it, by taking an interest in its associated publishing syndicate, where there will be a few openings for activity. The publishing syndicate is being formed as the base for a large general publishing company with headquarters in Washington, as is the most important factor of the expedition. Only financially responsible replies are sought. Take an interest in this sound and unusual enterprise and help to win fame and give America its history before A. D. 1492. McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.

Henry Pelkey, employed by the East Tennessee Light & Power Co., Bristol, Tenn., plunged 75 feet from the top of a smoke-stack—and when the damage was surveyed it was found to be confined to the roof of the boiler room and to steam fittings, for Pelkey had escaped without a scratch. Hospital examination scratch. Hospital examination showed no fractured bones and no blood lost.

He was painting the stack and was above the boiler room about as far as the roof of a five-story building is above the ground. When he attempted to shift his tackle to another side of the stack he slipped and fell. He crashed through the roof of the boiler room, which was of frame construction, and struck a 2-inch pipe, knocking a valve off of it, then came to rest on top of the boiler.

In its native tropics where there is no frost or cultivation, cotton grows year after year on the same plants, which eventually become about the size of an ordinary orchard peach tree. Under cultivation, however, it was found that better results were to be obtained by replanting the crop each year, the practice now universal in the cotton growing sections of the United States.

When cotton was introduced into Hawaii for commercial production it was found that four and five-year-old plants yielded well. Experiments were conducted to determine if cotton could be successfully cultivated like orchard crops, but because of insect pests and other difficulties it was found better to plant the crop each year.

By Nelson B. Bell.

We all know fairly well who the most popular screen stars are in this country, but their box-office ratings abroad have only just now been revealed by a survey on file at the major West Coast studios—and you'd be surprised!

Marlene Dietrich and Lilian Harvey top the list.

Greta Garbo and Maurice Chevalier are not far behind them.

Others ranking sufficiently high to be classed as topnotchers include Joan Crawford, Jose Mojica, Clark Gable, Janet Gaynor, Norma Shearer, John Barrymore, Warner Baxter, Clive Brook, Gary Cooper, Ramon Novarro, Elissa Landi, Clara Bow, Jan Keipura—he was heard at the Rialto in one picture, "Be Mine Tonight," and made a hit here, too—Jean Harlow, Frederic March, Willy Fritsch, Martha Eggerth, Franciszka Gaal and Charles Boyer.

The survey showed Sweden, Austria, China, Chile, Germany, Egypt, Greece, Finland, Turkey, England, Venezuela, Japan, Holland, Bulgaria, Brazil, Spain and Puerto Rico.

Many Favorites Rate Low.

Many enthusiastic supporters of the superior talents of such native popular idols as Mae West, Will Rogers, Wallace Beery, Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore and other ace American drawing-cards at the ticket wickets in this country have the consolation of knowing that they also rank high abroad, even if not up in the first flight.

It is characteristic of the list of leaders that many of those ranked highest are foreigners to begin with and speak with strong foreign accents. It is further notable that the American favorites who are not among the leaders in the various countries named are in large measure those whose endowments run principally to comic expression. American humor still is a thing of tremendous mystery to many foreign countries.

Evidence that films based on subject matter of greatest universality are those most liable to be best liked in the greatest number of countries is to be adduced from the fact that the so-called "animal pictures"—"King Kong," "Zoo in Budapest," "Tarzan," "S. O. S. Iceberg" and the rest—are among the undisputed leaders practically everywhere the survey reached.

Little Yugoslavia betrayed perhaps as prpfoundly catholic a taste as any country in which the tastes of the people were minutely examined. The box-office winners there were "Tarzan," "Sign of the Cross," "Song of Songs," "Cavalcade," "Catherine the Great," "My Lips Betray" and "Mata Hari."

Not a bad list at that.

In meeting the visiting artists for The Post's big first anniversary broadcast over WRC last night from 10 to 11, at Union Station yesterday afternoon, one was happy to find Tom Moore, builder and owner of the Rialto Theater and one of the motion picture pioneers of the Capital, marching at the head of the party and to note that Time works backward on him. "T. M." is years younger now than he was back in the middle 1900s when we used to build theaters for him on an Underwood No. 5.

And it was just as great a pleasure to observe that Charlie Winninger, sterling stage comedian and radio artist, who has been around for quite a while now, also is getting younger by the year. Charlie, husband of Blanche Ring, famous singing comedienne, and therefore brother-in-law of Tom Meighan, the m vie star and former stage actor, is in the pink, as we say around Pompton Lake and Asbury Park—ruddy, full of pep and on his toes every minute.

These two oldsters seemed a good deal younger and livelier than the supposedly livelier and younger associates they had with them—Molasses and January, Myron Duncan and one or two others.

All very encouraging!

Coming Soon to Local Screens

The incorrigible Miss Gracie Allen, of the nitwits of the networks, Burns & Allen, left, above, who will be seen on the Earle screen, beginning Friday, in "Many Happy Returns," in which Guy Lombardo also is prominent with his orchestra. At the right is Karen Morley, who plays the principal feminine role in "The Crime Doctor," which restores Friday as opening day of new bills at RKO-Keith's.

The Playbox Theater will open its Washington season next Monday night, June 18, with the satirical comedy, "The Queen's Cradle," recently given an auspicious premiere by the organization in Warrenton, Va.

The Playbox group has taken over the estate of Mrs. Isabelle Farington, located a few blocks beyond Chevy Chase Circle on Connecticut avenue, as the scene of its summer activities.

The Playbox Theater, it should be known, is a semiprofessional group numbering several veteran troupers among them. They will present many famous plays and Broadway revivals during the ensuing months. These include "Under the Gaslight," July 2 to 7; "Springtime for Henry," July 9 to 14; "The Play's the Thing," July 16 to 21; "March Hare," July 23 to 28; "The Drunkard"—now in its second year on the West Coast—July 30 to August 4, and "The Command to Love," August 6 to 11.

Among the Principals.

Many well known Washingtonians, long connected with local theatricals, will take part in the productions. Prominent among them will be Anna Ives, of the Arts Club; Virginia True, Edith Sears, Dorothy Lawrence, Lucile Cohan (Jean Abbey), Maurice Jarvis, Isham Keith, Frank Jameson, Forney Reese, Harold Long, chairman of the drama committee of the Arts Club, and Richard Stringfellow.

It is announced that refreshments will be served before and after the performance in the cool gardens surrounding the Playbox Theater, and that the spacious Farrington estate will be open to patrons of the performances.

What with censorship wars and rumors of wars, Managing Director Stephen E. Cochran of the National Theater Players was having his troubles yesterday. The nature of the disturbances over the presentable or nonpresentable character and content of "Sailor, Beware," has been pretty thoroughly gone into in the news columns of the local press.

This column has no intention of assuming an ironclad partisanship in the matter of whether or not "Sailor, Beware," should be allowed to play at the National, or anywhere else. It does feel, however, an acute and deep-seated aversion to the manner in which the present problem was approached and handled.

"Sailor, Beware," has run all season in New York. It was announced for Washington long before the National Theater Players put it on. It ran a week to constantly growing business without molestation. Then suddenly the management, from nonofficial sources, is alleged to have been apprised that the scheme was to serve warrants on all the members of the cast and place them under arrest at last night's performance.

This course, happily, was averted, but that it was ever contemplated seems a trifle less than the processes of simple justice.

Dam Construction Attacked in Suit

Charleston, W. Va., June 3 (AP).—A suit for an injunction to halt construction of a hydroelectric project in the New River at Hawks Nest was filed in Federal Court today by United States District Attorney George I. Neal.

He contends the New River provides a large part of the water in the Kanawha and that in dry seasons the dam would impede the flow of water and handicap navigation.

Construction of the power project was started in 1929 by the New-Kanawha Power Co.

"Oh, Helen, we'll have to get new furniture . . . where shall I go?"

● I know where to take you. One of the girls in my bridge club was talking abou tthe Seventh Floor at The Hecht Co. I dropped in the other day when I was down town and had a scrumptious time looking over the new furniture. They have a dozen or more rooms complete, everything . . . even to the draperies and little "fixings." It gives you a grand idea of how things look and helps you decide what you really need. Suppose we go down there tomorrow afternoon, shall we?

"I am a Sportswoman,

"What Do Dr. M. W. Locke Shoes Mean to Me?"

Badly-lasted, uncomfortable shoes simply ruin one's "game" . . . whether it be "on the green" or on the club house porch! Wise sportswomen wear shoes that give them poise, grace and plenty of action. Those shoes are Dr. M. W. Locke's . . . unlike any other shoes produced . . . with special features that permit the bones of the feet to assume their proper positions . . . watch your game improve with every wearing.
